BROKERS HOARDING COAL

U. S. Action Will Be Demanded to Stop Scheme of Waiting for High Prices

Waiting to take advantage of a natural or artificial shortage of anthracite coal in New England, certain coal brokers have stored and are storing coal in abandoned bins throughout this section of the country.

This information has been learned from an authoritative source by the Boston American. Federal officials are to be informed and every effort will be made to block these brokers in an attempt to realize on high prices of fuel sorely needed by consumers.

The practice of these brokers, it has been learned, is to have the coal shipped to them and to store it in bins given up by dealers in various communities. When the coal shortage gets to the point that householders yield to high prices in preference to suffering from the cold or using soft coal, these brokers will become retail coal dealers and dispense their commodity at high prices—$18 to $19 per ton is now understood to be the profiteering goal.

By the nature of the underground methods that these brokers employ it has not been possible to trace their various hoarding places. However, the practice is more general in the northern New England States where it is possible to realize $18 or $19 per ton without the public uproar that would be created here in Massachusetts.

BANGOR IS VICTIM.

Bangor, Me., is reputed to be one of the places where abandoned bins have been leased by coal brokers. Such practices are indged in in Massachusetts but on a more limited scale than in points farther north.

This practice, together with what is declared an obvious attempt to force New England consumers to use

El Paso, Tex., July 27.—R. E. Newman, rancher of San Andres Mountain section, near Tularosa, N. M., has been killed by bandits in Mexico, south of Columbus, N. M., according to a report received here and which is being investigated by the American consulate in Juarez.

Mr. Newman was being held for ransom and was killed by the Mexican gang because the money was not forthcoming, the report said.

FAILS AUTO TEST, SHOOTS HIMSELF

When the Lipskys of Lynn purchased an automobile five weeks ago both Peter and his wife applied for chauffeur's licenses. Mrs. Lipsky got her license promptly.

Peter was turned down.

The following week he tried again, and was again turned down because of his inexpert showing and lack of knowledge of the road rules. He began to act morbid and depressed. The third week he was again rejected, and he began to murder to himself. The fourth week he got another turn-down, and bought a revolver. The fifth time—this was last Wednesday, he got another rejection.

Today he is on the danger list at the Lynn Hospital, with a bullet in the region of his heart. He shot himself early today in his variety store at No. 783 Western avenue, Lynn. Just before shooting himself he said to his wife:

"I can't stand the thought of being rejected the sixth time next Wednesday."

FIVE HURT AS AUTO HITS POLE; 4 IN PARTY WOMEN

Cochituate, July 27.—Five persons were injured when an automobile struck a telephone pole on Main street today. The car was demolished.

W. P. Archibald was the most seriously hurt. He gave his address as No. 23 Norfolk street, Roxbury. His condition is not believed serious. He was taken in a passing machine to a hospital.

Others in the machine were his wife, Miss Jennie Murthie, Miss Dolly Curley and Miss Theresa Clark, all of Roxbury. The women were bruised and cut.

New York. (I.N.S.).—Automobiles killed 454 persons in this city during the first six months of this year, according to official figures revealed today. Within three months more than 7,500 persons were injured by motor cars.

CONFESSION INVOLVES COAKLEY

Fugitive Ex-Attorney Also Named Pelletier in Story He Gave to Allen

By HARRY A. BENWELL.

New York, July 27.—"They wanted information concerning Dan Coakley and Former District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier and I gave it to them."

For the first time since Bill Corcoran, former Middlesex District Attorney "spilled the beans" in his famous confession to then Attorney General J. Weston Allen, which left Pelletier so helpless in his disbarment trial he couldn't put in a defense, has acknowledged today that he had named the men who were kicked out of office and law practice following the famous Blackmail Ring expose.

It became definitely known today through information from Hempstead, L. I., that Corcoran and his wife have not been living together for some time. Mrs. Corcoran, it is understood, has purchased a home in Hempstead where she is living with her three children. Corcoran had been rooming in Manhattan until his arrest.

Bill, who is awaiting extradition to Boston, to face 23 indictments charging extortion, blackmail et cetera, declared bluntly today:

"I don't care whether or not they make the confession public. It concerns several cases in which they wanted information concerning Coakley and Pelletier."

That is as far as Bill would go.

Turn Over.

CUSTOMS OFFICER SUSPENDED IN RUM RAID

Providence, R. I., July 27 (U.N.S.).—United States Inspector and Deputy Collector of Customs Charles R. O'Connell was suspended today by Collector Emery San Souci following his arrest and arraignment before U. S. Commissioner Mattesen on charges of illegal possession and transportation of liquor. Patrolman Walter J. Mott of East Greenwich, who was arrested at the same time, was also suspended today by Chief of Police John H. Murray of that town. Three other men, James C. Riley, Benjamin F. Stevenson and David Yantes, all of Newport, are joint defendants with O'Connell and Mott.

NAB HOOTCH TRUCK WHEN LIGHTS FAIL

One hundred and ten gallons of moonshine and forty empty cans were found on a truck on the Newburyport turnpike, near Lynnfield, by State Constabulary Officer Inner Thompson, who had stopped the machine because it was traveling without lights. Joseph Cohen, of No. 28 Suffolk street, Malden, owner of the truck, the police say, left for a garage to get a repair man to fix the lights, but did not return.

MRS. M'CORMICK HYPNOTIZED HIM, SAYS SWISS CHAUFFEUR

Chicago, July 27.—Lewis Emile Ammon, a native of Switzerland, on trial before the insanity commission in the psycopathic court, harbors the hallucination that Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick, daughter of John D. Rockefeller, has exercised a sinister hypnotic influence over him for eight years since he was employed by her as a chauffeur in Switzerland, Dr. F. G. Gerty, superintendent of the Psychopathic Hospital, declared before the commission.

CORCORAN WILLING TO RETURN AND FIGHT BLACKMAIL CHARGES

EXPLAINS CAUSE OF DEFAULT

"I can't say any more at this time," he said.

He sat in the Tombs and sighed as he concluded. Famous men have sat in the Tombs, men like Harry Thaw and others. They, too, have sighed. In fact adjoining the Tombs is the famous Bridge of Sighs.

As I looked at Bill Corcoran, the man who had once been the darling Middlesex prosecutor, I could see what the blackmail expose had done to him. He is but a shadow of his former self. A man haggard and old with the haunted look that any hunted man has who has evaded the bounds of the law.

The ousted and disbarred district attorney presented a pathetic figure as he gave to the Boston American the only interview he has granted since his indictment within the walls of the historic old city prison. It was difficult to recognize in this gray haired, unshaven, shabby dressed man the gay man-about-town of a year ago who had been accustomed to squandering hundreds of dollars nightly in Boston's "bright lights."

"I am going to fight when I get back to Boston," Corcoran declared, clenching his fist and bringing it down with force on the arm of his chair. "I have always been ready and willing to go back when the final trial would take place."

READY TO GO BACK

Corcoran explained that he had been prompted to default his $10,000 bail when his hearing was ended because he was financially embarrassed and was unable as a result to make the trips between New York and Boston that presence at the hearings required.

"I did not have money enough to run back and forth between Boston and New York for the preliminary hearings. I always intended to go back for the real trial, however. I am ready and willing to go back now and will waive extradition.

My trouble has been that I have permitted too many other people to handle my affairs. From now on I am going to be my own lawyer, and will fight for myself as I fought in the old days," Corcoran declared, continuing.

HIS OWN ATTORNEY

"I do not care to make any complete statement at this time. I am working on my defense now. Later on, perhaps, I may have something to say. I have not decided whether it would be advisable for me to talk at all as far as the statement which I made to Former Atty.-Gen. J. Weston Allen a year ago is concerned."

Here Corcoran alluded to his so-called "confession," extracts of which have been made public by Allen from time to time as evidence in his prosecution of other members of the "Blackmail Ring."

In spite of Corcoran's announcement that he is willing to waive extradition, he is being held pending the arrival of extradition papers from Boston. The laws of the State of New York require that a warrant signed by the Governor be presented before a person held on a charge of being a fugitive from justice can be released.

Inspector John Mitchell of the Attorney-General's office has returned to Boston after talking with Corcoran and will secure the necessary papers for Corcoran's extradition. He will then present the papers to Governor Smith's signatures. It is expected that Corcoran's arrival in Boston by tomorrow can be effected.

Corcoran announced he would appear in person at his own defense and would prepare his own defense. This, he said, he has already begun.

Corcoran was arraigned in the Jefferson Market Court and held without bail for thirty days, pending the arrival of extradition papers from Massachusetts. Assistant Attorney General Albert Hurwit on Massachusetts was present at the hearing.

Corcoran's arrest came as he left the Knickerbocker Building where he had been visiting the office of Harry Levenson, Boston attorney, against whom disbarment proceedings are now pending.

TUFTS' CASE FIGURE

Levenson, another alleged member of the "Blackmail Ring," was convicted a month ago in the East Cambridge Superior Court on larceny. He was sentenced to two years imprisoned, and was granted a stay of sentence pending the prosecution of his appeal. He is now at Old Orchard, Me. Levenson is not in prison, but is out on $5000 bail.

The Levenson case of 1920 was an outgrowth of the Supreme Court proceedings which ultimately culminated with the removal of Nathan A. Tufts from the office of district attorney for Middlesex county.

Levenson was charged with larceny in endeavoring to get money from James Hughes and Ernest E. Linear, under arrest for receiving stolen property during the Tufts regime.

Edith Gould's 'Hubby,' Miniature Painter; Exit 'Broker'

Philadelphia, July 27. — The drab brokerage business goes to second place in the life of young Carroll Livingstone Wainwright of New York. He can paint miniatures. His newly discovered talent is the cause of great joy to him and his wife, the former Miss Edith Gould.

"One day I tried a miniature. Everybody complimented me. I got busy. And now I've about decided to make miniature painting my profession and let the brokerage business take second place."

To date Mr. Wainwright has done a miniature of his dark-eyed wife, one of his little son, and one of himself when a baby. He is working on one of Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, his wife's sister.

"A great many of my friends have asked me to do them," he added, "I shall, but I'm going to charge for it.

bituminous coal, adds further weight to the burden which Massachusetts, and particularly Greater Boston consumers are experiencing in the present shortage of anthracite.

Mayor Curley, who declares the hard coal shortage is an artificial one, created to force the people to use bituminous, says he will leave nothing undone in his power to break the conspiracy.

The Mayor has pointed out that official reports are that the use of soft coal increased fires in this city last year and that reports further set forth that the chimneys in this community are now soiled to the consumption of soft coal in Boston or Greater Boston.

GRAVE, SAYS CURLEY.

In discussing the present situation, which he pronounces grave, Mayor Curley intimates that the city itself may consider buying its future anthracite supplies directly at the mines

"Unless there is governmental control over the distribution of anthracite in New England," says Mayor Curley, "it might be feasible for the city of Boston to contract for its anthracite coal at the mines.

SUSPEND MAYOR ON RUM CHARGE

Columbus, O., July 27.—Mayor William Gabee of Youngstown today was suspended from office for thirty days by Governor Donahey upon charges of nonfeasance, gross and willful neglect of duty and failure to enforce the laws relating to intoxicating liquors. At the same time the Governor preferred similar charges against Chief of Police Jones Watkins of Youngstown, who, however, was not suspended.

Mayor Reese is the second city executive removed by Governor Donahey, Mayor Herbert Vogt of Massillon being the first. Vogt's removal was upheld by the State Supreme Court.

MINE PIONEER DIES; GOULD'S ASSOCIATE

New York, July 27.—George Turnbull, a pioneer mining man and railroad builder and former associate of Jay Gould, died yesterday at Roselle, N. J., in his seventy-eighth year.

Born in Boston, the son of George Turnbull of Liverpool, England, he went to Denver, Col., in 1867 and engaged in the mining business. The late Governor Grant of Colorado was at one time employed by him as an assayer at Central City, and it was Mr. Turnbull who sent Grant to Leadville, where the Grant smelters were developed later.

After an experience in gold mining in California, Mr. Turnbull returned to Colorado, where he built several railroads, among them the Denver, Utah and Pacific. He obtained from Guzman Blanco, director of Venezuela, the Manoa concession of 120,000 square miles.

GIRL'S MOTHER LOVED 'DREYFUS CASE' VICTIM

By BERT FORD

Haverhill, July 27.—Mrs. Ethel C. Barnes, attractive young Marlboro divorcee, did her utmost to be married to Henry Hilliard Hobbs, central figure in "New England's Dreyfus case," while he was in jail awaiting trial on the charge made by her fourteen-year-old daughter that Hobbs attacked her on his farm in Atkinson, N. H.

Mrs. Barnes sought to become the bride of Hobbs to demonstrate her belief in him and as a public refutation of the accusation made by his daughter, a pupil at Marlboro High School. Hobbs was eager for the marriage, too, but the Rockingham County authorities refused to grant their request.

Mrs. Barnes told her attorney and friends at the time that she was threatened with prosecution as an accessory if she took the stand for Hobbs and gave that as her reason for not testifying at the trial.

SHOWS HER DEVOTION

As a further demonstration of her devotion she set up a hair dressing business in Concord, N. H., in order to be near Henry while he was serving the ten to fifteen-year term in New Hampshire state prison. His aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Hobbs of No. 56 Moore street, Haverhill, are fighting to have their son pardoned on the ground that he is innocent.

Before moving to Concord Mrs. Barnes rented at the Hobbs' farm in Atkinson and did the chores like a man. She lived there alone until she found a buyer for the property. She made a full accounting for the proceeds derived from sale of the property and the lunch cart in Haverhill and after meeting legal and other bills turned over $500 in cash to Hobbs which he later paid out to lawyers in his efforts to be freed.

PROVED HER LOYALTY

No wife could be more loyal to Hobbs than Mrs. Barnes was during the year she toiled at Concord. She furnished him with fresh linen and fruit and reading matter and wrote him letters that teemed with love and devotion. In these letters she assured Henry that she would wait for his liberation, "if it takes forty years."

They had a disagreement in May, 1921, and Mrs. Barnes went to New York, telling her landlady that she expected to marry a business man. None of her intimates seem to know whether she is married or not.

"The last letter I received from Mrs. Barnes was on May 27, 1921. She mentioned that she had a good opportunity in New Jersey and that she expected to go to Florida. She did not say she was to be married. I gathered that having been a traintender she could get a job behind a good position as traveling companion for some wealthy person.

"I do know that she loved Henry Hobbs. She told me many times that they were made for each other and that no other man could fill her life. Mrs. Barnes was no ordinary woman. She was well educated and refined appearing. She was a slender blonde. She certainly stayed for Hobbs and was making a new man of him until the unfortunate incident involving her daughter.

"She often said if her daughter had not visited the farm she and Henry would have carried out their plans to marry and after saving money from their lunch cart business, they were to have moved into the West and settled there.

SAYS HE'S INNOCENT

"A woman whose minor daughter had been violated would not be apt to stand by Hobbs so loyally if he were guilty. Whatever else the officials in New Hampshire may have had against Henry Hobbs, I feel positive that he is innocent of this charge and the girl's mother told me so over and over again. That woman was a wonderful influence over Hobbs. She filled his home with comfort. She loved time to stock up on all sorts of preserves in spite of the fact that she and Henry drove down to the lunch cart in her own car every morning and both toiled there until 8 or 10 o'clock at night. How many wives would do that for a man"

"They were doing a good business when this thing happened and sent Henry away for ten years. Mrs. Barnes told me that Henry opposed having her daughter on the farm and that he and the girl never got along."

(The first of Mrs. Barnes' love letters to Hobbs will be published tomorrow.)

Vivienne really intended to be Mrs. Ames last night. She and Ames went to Elkton, Md., the Gretna Green of the East, to be married. But the ceremony was halted by a legal complication, and she postponed to her part in "Adrienne" just plain Vivienne Segal.

Today, however, they are en route to Hagerstown, Md., and anticipate no delay this time.

Ames recently was divorced.

GIRL DOING TIME SKIPS FROM JAIL

Miss Mary Kostine, twenty, of East Boston, today escaped from East Cambridge jail, where she had been sentenced to serve a term for larceny.

She was committed from Woburn court about a week ago. After her arrival she was assigned to some work in Sheriff John Fairbairn's home, connected with the jail.

Today, one of the matrons thought it was queer she did not hear Mary at work and investigated. She found the girl had slipped out the door.

A stay of execution was granted when his attorneys gave notice of appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and the priest was released on bonds of $5,000. He spent Wednesday night in jail after his conviction late that afternoon.

Father Grace still faces charges of illegal possession and transportation of liquor and of conspiracy to violate and evade the Volstead act.

ISOLATION NOT PEACE REMEDY-MORGANTHAU

Williamstown, Mass., July 27 (By International News Service).—Deploring the lack of unity among European nations and criticizing America's policy of isolation, Henry Morgenthau, former ambassador to Turkey, today delivered the opening address at the Institute of Politics here today.

Taking as his subject the Lausanne Conference as it affected Turkey, Morganthau said:

Henry Morgenthau

WATCHED TURK TRIUMPH.

"America sat with her hands tied, but her eyes open, observing the wily Turk triumph over the other countries, just as the Germans would have triumphed over them if the United States had not entered the war."

Morganthau then reviewed the entire struggle of the Near East.

"The European Powers had to assent to Turkey's statement that the Armenian question was ended by the destruction of the Armenians, thus condoning the greatest crime in history," Morganthau said, speaking of the Lausanne Peace Treaty.

PERSISTENT GROUPS WIN.

The Lausanne conference, he said, pointed out above all else that "a small band of determined men, such as the Kemalists in Turkey or the Bolsheviks in Russia, can at any time threaten the peace of the world."

Morgenthau urged America to look to the determined efforts of the currency reformers and prohibitionists, who for many years patiently toiled to bring about the reforms they sought.

"Just as these determined men won their ends, so can America assume her full duties as a world power, leading toward the light, finding a method of minimizing and finally abandoning war," he said.

FILENE STANDS FOR REDUCED IMMIGRATION

Edward A. Filene has written an article appearing in a current issue of a national publication, opposing the lowering of the bars on immigration.

Edward A. Filene

In view of the fact that large employers generally favor the removal of the present restrictions and because of the fact he was once opposed to restriction, Mr. Filene's article is attracting widespread attention among leading business men of the country.

He makes four principal points in his arguments for continuation of the existing restrictions. These points are:

HIS SEVEN POINTS.

A study of th problem of immigration has changed him, though an employed of labor, from a life long believer in unrestricted immigratio to a supporter of drastic reduction.

Increased immigration would cut down the profits of business because it would so far lower the standard of living of our whole population as to reduce the consumption of goods and cut down the value of our home market as the war has already done for the European market.

LABOR IS PLENTIFUL.

Employers do not need an increased labor supply, since increased use of labor-saving machinery and elimination of waste in production and distribution will for many years reduce costs more rapidly than wages increase and so prevent undue domination by labor.

Increased immigration would so reduce the birthrate of American families that at the end of fifty years our total population would not be greater than with no immigration at all; but the 1920,000 new mouths, hands and feet, mainly of peasants, would create a permanent poverty, dependency and disease.

America can better serve the suffering of other lands by presenting them an object lesson of a highly paid, educated and contented people than by admitting them here to scramble for jobs that wouldn't go round.

The immigration policy followed by the United States during the next ten years will profoundly affect the business, social and moral welfare for all our citizens, who in their own interests should study the problem with care.

15 MEN DOPE GIRL THEN ATTACK HER

Providence, July 27.—Mrs. Dora St. John Farland, nineteen years old, was abducted, "doped" by hypodermic injections, manhandled, attacked by fifteen men, and then dumped up in a corner of the rear door of her home at Main and Manchester streets, Cranston, R. I., it was declared in confidential at the State Hospital.

Albert St. John, the girl's brother, and Henry Lamoureaux, a brother-in-law, carried the girl when they heard her moans, and went to the rear door. When they came threaten the peace of the world." threaten the peace of the world."

Morgenthau urged America to look to the determined efforts of the currency reformers and prohibitionists, who for many years patiently toiled to bring about the reforms they sought.

"Just as these determined men won their ends, so can America assume her full duties as a world power, leading toward the light, finding a method of minimizing and finally abandoning war," he said.

GUNMAN KILLS 2 COPS; SEIZE TAXI IN CHASE

New York, July 27.—In the capture today of a taxicab after a running chase through the Bronx, during which a pursuing policeman fired several shots at a chauffeur who escaped, police believed they had found the car used by a man who shot and killed Policemen Charles Reynolds and Frank Romanelli.

The taxicab was captured by Policeman Zaggart, on the lookout for the murder car, after he had seen two suspicious looking persons alight and run into an apartment house. The chauffeur, refusing to obey Zaggart's command to stop, raced away, pursued by Zaggart in another car. Getting a lead of several blocks, the chauffeur abandoned his taxicab and escaped.

The two patrolmen were killed when they had overtaken a man and a woman in a taxicab after a chase.

Policeman Frank Sussman, on duty at Second avenue and Sixty-second street, at 11:50 o'clock saw a yellow taxicab headed north, with a policeman in uniform on the running board. The man in uniform was Romanello. Reynolds, according to Sussman, was seated on the floor of the car beside the driver.

"When the car got to Sixty-fourth street, only a few blocks from where I was standing," Sussman told Inspector Kelly, "I heard one shot and then a series of shots in rapid succession. I saw Romanello fall off the taxicab to the pavement. Reynolds followed a moment later. By the time I reached the fallen men, the taxicab had disappeared."

Mannheim, July 27 (I.N.S.)—French troops occupied Rheinau, in Baden today, expelling the German police.

Paris, July 27 (A.P.)—The French reply to the British reparation note will be delivered Sunday. It accepts some of the British suggestions.

Premier Poincare left Paris for his country home at Sampigny for a few days' rest after giving the finishing touches to the reply. It is regarded in French official circles as conciliatory. It is supposed on the best authority, nevertheless, to maintain that the occupation of the Ruhr will be maintained until the payment of reparation is assured, and negotiations entered into with Germany until her passive resistance ceases.

The French Premier expresses a willingness to modify the occupation when this resistance ends, making it as nearly what the British call "invisible" as the necessities of the situation and the objects of the occupation will permit.

The expectation in official circles here is that the separate Belgian reply to be sent to Great Britain will accord exactly with the French on these points.

U. S. DEADLOCK IN MEXICO BROKEN

Mexico City, July 27 (AP.)—The minutes of the conference between United States and Mexican reconciliation commissioners held open to include notations on the claims conventions which will embrace expressions from both governments of intentions to sign the conventions after recognition is accorded Mexico by the United States.

The biggest stumbling block in the mixed claims deadlock, broken yesterday, was the opposition of the Mexican delegates to the American contention for the privilege of United States shareholders in Mexican corporations to file claims against Mexico with the mixed commission for damages caused by the agrarian and other Mexican policies.

The agreement finally reached, it is understood, meets the Mexican objection that Mexican subjects might take advantage of this privilege and through devious means obtain the presentation of their own claims through United States shareholders.

Woman 'Railroaded' to Asylum

Today

Liberty's Tomb. Too Bad The Everlasting League We Need Peter the Great He Wouldn't Play Golf

—By Arthur Brisbane.

(Copyright, 1923, by Star Company.)

WILLIAM WATSON, genuine English poet who wrote of "The Woman With the Serpent's Tongue," turns his attention now to our Franco-American lady, the bronze Statue of Liberty in the harbor of New York. To her he addresses these little verses, published in London yesterday:

TO AMERICA'S STATUE OF LIBERTY

Proud thing of fame,
How strange at last thy doom;
Liberty's image—

IT IS VERY sad for this country to be called a tomb. But perhaps the poet doesn't mean it. England and other countries hoped the United States would remain a wide open pocketbook, in which Europe might have full liberty. When we closed our pocketbook they felt that liberty was dead. So it was, as far as their American plans were concerned.

SENATOR UNDERWOOD, conspicuous candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, says the United States should go into the League of Nations, in order to help the price of wheat. He also thinks that Europe, later, may cut down on her cotton purchases. And going into the League of Nations would make Europe buy more cotton.

INTERESTING SUGGESTION, but WHY would Europe pay more for American wheat and American cotton if we went into the League of Nations? Should we lend them money with which to buy our wheat and cotton? If so, who would supply it? Does Senator Underwood think the United States could settle Europe's troubles, envy, hatreds, jealousies, spirit of conquest that Europe herself cannot settle.

HIRAM JOHNSON asks how the United States can expect to settle Europe's troubles if we can't make the mine owners and mine workers of West Virginia stop fighting each other, or settle our railroad problem, or farm problem, or make the Ku Klux Klan live in peace with Catholics and Jews.

How would Senator Underwood answer that question?

WHAT THIS COUNTRY needs, among other things, is a man like Peter the Great, without Peter's Asiatic savagery.

We need a man whose mind would be never on golf, trout fishing, or galivanting, but everlastingly on AMERICAN CONSTRUCTION.

IF PETER WERE here he would be experimenting with flying machines of all kinds, as he used to experiment with shipping when he brought his ship carpenters from Holland and England to the cold North.

Peter himself would be in the flying machine factories, working there with his own hands. He would be at this minute eagerly reading the news about the French Boomerang flying machine that, with no man on board, guided only by radio, went from one city to another, turned around and came back. It wouldn't take Peter long to have a thousand such machines practicing every day.

THERE WASN'T ANY golf in Peter's day. The Czars before him and the nobles of his time spent their lives hunting the bear, the wolf and the wild boar. That was their "golf." Peter had no time for such nonsense. But once, to show what he thought of imitation war, he organized a great hunt for the nobles, on condition that they should look after their own dogs, taking no servants along. They were soon pulled out their horses by the dogs, mixed up on the ground, and glad enough to go home and attend to the business of the country, as Peter wished.

ESTRANGED HUSBAND BLAMED

Mrs. Mary U. Orrell, Freed, Now Urges State Probe of All Such Institutions

Case No. 44431 in the Hampden County Probate Court at Springfield, revealing a situation in the State insane asylums which caused a probate judge to express horror and astonishment, may be the basis of a State-wide reform.

It is the case of Mrs. Mary U. Orrell of Chicopee, who, after spending a year in the State Hospital for the insane at Northampton, has been declared sane.

Judge Charles L. Long of the Springfield Probate Court, in granting a petition to dismiss the guardian of Mrs. Orrell, said that the evidence he had examined showed that Mrs. Orrell was sane before she was committed to the asylum; she was sane while she was at the asylum and she is sane today.

Judge C. L. Long

STILL LEGALLY INSANE

Despite this positive and sweeping statement from a judge who has had much experience in such matters, the woman today is still legally insane.

Judge Long said that there are many cases similar to that of Mrs. Orrell—sane persons who for one reason or another have been committed to asylums—sometimes to merely get them out of the way, sometimes for purposes of revenge and sometimes for money reasons.

The laxity of the law with respect to insane persons was demonstrated in the now famous Dorothy Gardner Michigan blue laws case of a young heiress who was sent to the McLean Hospital at Waverly. She is still there. The case has not been closed. There is a question as to whether or not her mind is normal. But the record of the case punches the law full of holes.

There is the case of Fred Tindley, a wealthy young Beverly, who, on the mere say-so of Chief of Police John Hayes of that town, was committed for observation to the psychopathic hospital. Tindley had reported the shooting of two persons by Chief Hayes. He was discharged as sane within a few days, and today is suing Hayes for $50,000. In this case revenge is given as the motive.

But the case of Mrs. Orrell tops both of these.

For two years she was an inmate of the asylum at Northampton.

NIGHTS OF HORROR

Night after night she was subjected to the terrifying environment of the asylum.

Attendants have been known to break down under the mental stress of living among the insane.

Night after night this woman, declared sane by a judge of the Probate Court, listened to the howls and shrieks of the demented.

On several occasions she was knocked down by violent patients, and she was informed it was part of the treatments for paranoia.

Paranoia was the mental disease Mrs. Orrell was said to have been suffering from.

There is an accepted fact among psychiatrists and alienists that hundreds of people suffer from various forms of paranoia. If everybody showing a trace of paranoia were to be sent to an asylum, there wouldn't be room in the State institutions to accommodate ten per cent of the victims, they say.

Under the present State law anybody who exhibits any trace of eccentricity—anybody who goes about without wearing a hat—anybody who manifests an undue interest in a particular hobby—may be classified as a paranoiac and sent to an asylum.

It was on the complaint of George F. Orrell, a fireman of South Hol-

FILM QUEEN "NEEDS GOOD SPANKING"

Former Husband of Helene Chadwick Suggests Punishment for "Fickle Girl"

Auburn, N. Y., July 27.—"She ought to be spanked," said Louis H. Fontaine, when he heard that his first wife, Helene Chadwick, motion picture actress, had filed suit in Los Angeles, Cal., for divorce from William Wellman of Boston, whom she charged with desertion.

"I never did see such a fickle girl," said Fontaine. "Although I realize that a girl in the films has thousands of admirers and chances to meet wealthy people,"

NEVER EXTRAVAGANT.

"I cannot see for the life of me, why she wants to divorce Wellman —unless it is because he is not well enough off to suit her—but then she never was a very extravagant girl. That may seem a strange thing for me to say, but it is true."

Helene Chadwick, who was born and lived for many years at Chadwick, N. Y., near Utica, a place named after her grandfather, a wealthy tannery owner, married Louis Fontaine at Geneva, N. Y., in July, 1918. During the remaining months of 1918 and some of 1919 they lived in this city. Then the war broke out and Fontaine enlisted and was sent overseas.

ROMANCE ENDS.

It was not until he returned to Auburn, immediately after the armistice was signed, that he realized that his wife cared for someone else. Then came divorce.

Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick frowned upon the divorce. They didn't approve of it at all. It was a little more than a year before the girl made her second plunge into matrimony, marrying Wellman of Boston. As Mrs. Wellman she was quite a personage in Boston society.

Copenhagen, July 27.—Frederick Wilhelm Hohenzollern, former Crown Prince of Germany, may make a break from his place of exile in Holland for Berlin, where his wife is popular, and where it is understood there is a strong sentiment in favor of his return, according to continental reports. It is believed the Dutch authorities would not be too vigilant in case a break for the German border should be made. The prince is convinced the time is ripe for a monarchial coup d'etat.

HELENE CHADWICK WELLMAN

Louis H. But he did not specify whether the punishment should be applied manually or by the well known hair brush method. Ajax defying the lightning had nothing on Helene, however, when it comes to inviting somebody—anybody to start something.

GALLIGAN TAKEN AT GUN-POINT

Charged With Engineering Three Big Payroll Robberies in Cambridge

Thomas "Peanuts" Galligan, No. 109 Elm street, Cambridge, youthful alleged bandit, arrested by Cambridge police as "the brains" of a bold daylight holdup gang, is credited by the University City officers as being the most desperate gunman in the East.

Galligan is charged with engineering three big Cambridge payroll robberies, those at The Penn Metal Company, the Simplex Wire Company and the American Pneumatic Service Company, the last named netting thousands of dollars. Peanuts Galligan, of dollars are involved in the three thefts.

TAKEN AT GUN POINT.

Officials of the three companies positively identified Galligan as the leader of the holdup gangs responsible for the robberies.

Galligan is suspected of being the bandit who murdered George A. Wills, Paymaster of the Boston News Bureau, who was held up, robbed of $1,600 and shot to death last December.

Galligan was arrested by Inspector Cody of Charleston at pistol point, as Galligan was buying a ticket for New York in the South Station. Cody went to the South Station on a tip that Galligan was about to leave for the West. The inspector arrived just five minutes before the train for New York pulled out.

Rushing through the crowd with his revolver drawn, Cody arrested Galligan at the ticket office, and pressed his gun into the alleged bandit's face. Galligan was the most surprised man in the big station.

BLUFF FAILS

"What's the big idea, Tom?" he asked the inspector. The bluff didn't work. The two men met on numerous occasions. On the way back to the Cambridge police station, Galligan was in a defiant mood and continuously jested with his captor. He refused to take his arrest seriously.

Officials of the Manufacturers' National Bank were unable to identify Galligan as the robber who held up a messenger of that bank two months ago.

Acting on the advice of his counsel Galligan refused to answer questions put to him by the police.

CLOSED SHOP REFUSED BY COAL OWNERS

Atlantic City, N. J., July 27, (A.P.)—The strike cloud which has hovered over anthracite wage conferences at the Hotel Ambassador since July 6, appeared sooty black today as operators and miners, having parted last night in utter disagreement over the closed shop and the check-off, met again to decide whether it would be of any use to continue peaceful negotiations.

What the next development might be, in the event of the premature adjournment of these conferences, neither side would predict. Both declined to comment on the possibility of Federal intervention. The miners already have announced they do not propose to arbitrate.

The present crisis was reported after two days of discussion of No. 1 of the miners' demands when John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, embodied the check-off and "complete recognition of the union." Interpreted as the closed shop, in a resolution on which the joint committee voted four to four.

Mr. Lewis announced that, inasmuch as the operators were "arbitrarily rejecting the proposition, the conferences might as well adjourn." The operators remained adamant in refusing to recognize the closed shop and check-off. They asked an overnight truce, however, and the miners agreed.

The attitude of the miners, expressed by Mr. Lewis today, was:

"We are insistent on this point, and will continue to be."

And S. D. Warriner, the operators' spokesman, replied when asked if their stand was final: "We presume it is."

3 FROM HUB HURT IN AUTO CRASH

New York, July 27. (I.N.S.)—Four persons, three of them visitors from Boston, were injured, perhaps seriously, in a collision of two motor cars here today.

The injured are:

Josephine Panche, Nicholas Panche and Charles Kalycka, all of Boston, and Mary Kalycka of No. 422 East Seventy-fifth street, New York. The accident occurred at East Seventy-sixth street and Park avenue, when the machine driven by Panche collided with a car driven by Herman Myrenberg.

CLOSES WHOLE COUNTY FOR BLUE SUNDAY

Ludington, Mich., July 27, (A.P.)—Now comes the "Ludington Blues."

Dusting off the statute books, county authorities have noted all the Michigan blue laws regarding Sabbath observance and announce that they will be enforced.

Virgil A. Fitch, prosecuting attorney of Mason County, declared that enforcement of the Sunday blue laws will mean:

1—Sabbath closing all billiard parlors, soft drink emporiums, dance halls, theaters and other places of amusements, including bathing beaches.

2—Stopping publication and distribution of the Ludington Sunday News.

3—Stopping Sunday play on all golf courses in the county.

4—Arrest of all persons driving automobiles for pleasure on the Sabbath.

This last is not Prosecutor Fitch's idea. Credit goes to H. H. Hafert, mayor of Ludington, who announced that he personally would swear out complaints against all persons driving for pleasure Sunday. This includes tourists. Every car entering the county will be stopped.

The situation is the result of efforts of club women and others to close dance halls on Sunday. After the matter had been laid before city authorities without results, the prosecutor took a hand. He took the view that he could not with consistency enforce one blue law without enforcing all.

"We just wanted the law enforced against Sunday dancing, movies and billiard parlors," said Mrs. Dan Sullivan president of the Swedish Methodist Ladies' Aid Society.

DR. MORRIS QUITS HAVERHILL JOB

Haverhill, July 27.—Dr. Abraham S. Morris, 344 Washington street, city physician, who was arrested Sunday with Miss Alice Mansfield, a nurse, in his apartment, today tendered his resignation to the city council.

Dr. Morris and the nurse were discovered by Mrs. Morris and a police officer. Following his arrest, the city council demanded his resignation, but the doctor defied them. Today he capitulated, and offered it, effective August 1.

FATHER CRIES FOR DAUGHTER, ANNIE FOLEY

"Tell Annie I'm bearing a heavy cross. The burden at times seems too much. I cry, 'Oh God, lighten my load.' I try to be patient, but it is hard. Tell Annie to come home, I need her."

Thomas M. Foley bowed his grey head and wept.

Twelve years ago his 18-year-old daughter, Annie Foley, vanished. He has never seen or heard of her since. Recently her sister Mary died. More recent sickness laid hold of Annie's mother and her younger brother. They are in a critical condition.

Tom needs his daughter Annie. He's aging and his fight has been hard. He lives at No. 87 Linden street, Revere, and is a night watchman at the Beacon Oil Docks, there. Night watchmen don't earn much but Tom saved, and bought property. Today he wants Annie to come home, that she might fall heir to his thrift when death calls him.

If you read this, Annie Foley or Dorothy Boyce, as you used to call yourself, when you were youthful, pretty and impetuous, communicate with your father, or, if not him, with Attorney Daniel F. O'Grady of Everett.

U. S. SHIP SKIPS FROM SOVIET CUSTODY

Nome, Alaska, July 27.—Officers and crew of the American trading schooner Iskum of Tacoma, Wash., were being congratulated here today on having freed themselves from the custody of the Soviet government of Russia. Owners of the craft had been informed that trade with Russian countries was carried on at the risk of the trader and that therefore the American State Department could do nothing.

In that dilemma the men of the Iskum seized Soviet guards placed aboard their vessel to keep the craft in Siberian waters, put the custodians in irons, and escaped from Anadyr and crossed the Bering Sea to Nome.

Today the Iskum, which belongs to the Phoenix Northern Trading Company of Tacoma, is lying here and the erstwhile guards are in the custody of American authorities.

The Hudson's Bay Company Trading Vessel Bay Chimo, aided in the escape of the Iskum. Ordered to prevent the Iskum from getting away, the Bay Chimo ran aground, though the Soviet authorities had been reported to the Hudson's Bay Company as inimical to the Americans.

It was said that someone aboard the Bay Chimo had put her steering gear out of order.

The Iskum was one of four American schooners that the Soviet authorities at East Cape, Siberia, ordered held on charges of violating Russian trading laws.

Garden City, N. J., July 27.—Lieuts Dickinson, accompanied by Charles Dickinson, president of the Aero Club of Illinois, and Arthur Gray, mechanic, arrived at Hazelhurst Field at 7:30 o'clock Eastern Standard Time today in the all-metal monoplane in which he left Chicago at 11 o'clock last night, completing in 8½ hours the first non-stop, three-passenger flight between the two cities.

ROMANCE ENDS.

It was not until he returned to Auburn, immediately after the armistice was signed, that he realized that his wife cared for someone else. Then came divorce.

Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick frowned upon the divorce. They didn't approve of it at all. It was a little more than a year before the girl made her second plunge into matrimony, marrying Wellman of Boston. As Mrs. Wellman, she was quite a personage in Boston society.

St. Xavier. They are Ralph Knapp, formerly of No. 294 Hemenway street, Boston, and Miss Glee Hastings of Wellesley College. The awards were made in recognition of their services in behalf of orphans and refugees in Greece since the Smyrna disaster. Knapp is managing director in Greece for the Near East Relief. Miss Hastings is superintendent of orphanages in that area, where 15,000 children are being cared for.

KAISER'S SON PLOTS FLIGHT AND CROWN

Copenhagen, July 27.—Frederick Wilhelm Hohenzollern, former Crown Prince of Germany, may make a break from his place of exile in Holland for Berlin, where his wife is popular, and where it is understood there is a strong sentiment in favor of his return, according to continental reports. It is believed the Dutch authorities would not be too vigilant in case a break for the German border should be made. The prince is convinced the time is ripe for a monarchial revolt.

DARES ANYONE TO START TROUBLE

HELENE CHADWICK WELLMAN

Louis H. Fontaine, former husband of Helene Chadwick Wellman, noted movie star, when he heard she had sued her present spouse, Walter Wellman of Boston, for divorce, declared that the fair Helene ought to be treated the way vexed mothers sometimes discipline their refractory children. But he did not specify whether the punishment should be applied manually or by the well known hair brush method. Ajax defying the lightning had nothing on Helene, however, when it comes to inviting somebody—anybody to start something.

FATHER CRIES FOR DAUGHTER, ANNIE FOLEY

"Tell Annie I'm hearing a heavy cross. The burden at times seems no much. I cry, 'Oh God, lighten my load. I try to be patient, but it is hard. Tell Annie to come home. I need her."

Thomas M. Foley bowed his grey head and wept.

Twelve years ago his 16-year-old daughter, Annie Foley, vanished. He has never seen or heard of her since. Recently her sister Mary died. More recent sickness laid hold of Annie's mother and her younger brother. They are in a critical condition.

Tom needs his daughter Annie. He's aging and his fight has been hard. He lives at No. 87 Linden street, Revere, and is a night watchman at the Beacon Oil Works there. Night watchmen don't earn much on Tom saved, and bought property. Today he wants Annie to come home that she might fall heir to his thrift when death calls him.

If you read this, Annie Foley or Dorothy Boyce, as you used to call yourself, when you were youthful, pretty and impetuous, communicate with your father, or if not him, with attorney Daniel F. O'Grady of Revere.

18-MO. CHILD FALLS, FRACTURING SKULL

Gloria Freedman, eighteen months old, of 81 Chestnut street, Chelsea, sustained a fractured skull when she fell from the piazza at the home of a aunt, Mrs. Freedman, 42 Shurtleff street, Chelsea.

U. S. SHIP SKIPS FROM SOVIET CUSTODY

Nome, Alaska, July 27.—Officers and crew of the American trading schooner Iskum of Tacoma, Wash., were being congratulated here today on having freed themselves from the custody of the Soviet powers of Russia. Owners of the craft had been informed that trade with Russian countries was carried on at the risk of the trader and that therefore the American State Department could do nothing.

In that dilemma the men of the Iskum seized Soviet guards placed aboard their vessel to keep the craft in Siberian waters, put the custodians in irons and escaped from Anadyr and crossed the Bering Sea to Nome.

Today the Iskum, which belongs to the Phoenix Northern Trading Company of Tacoma, is lying here and the erstwhile guards are in the custody of American authorities.

The Hudson's Bay Company Trading Vessel Bay Chimo, aided in the escape of the Iskum. Ordered to prevent the Iskum from getting away, the Bay Chimo ran aground, though the Soviet authorities had been reported to the Hudson's Bay Company as inimical to the American.

It was said that someone aboard the Bay Chimo had put her steering gear out of order.

The Iskum was one of four American schooners that the Soviet authorities at East Cape, Siberia, ordered held on charges of violating Russian trading laws.

GALLIGAN TAKEN AT GUN POINT

Charged With Engineering Three Big Payroll Robberies in Cambridge

Thomas "Peanuts" Galligan, No. 109 Elm street, Cambridge, youthful alleged bandit, arrested by Cambridge police as "the brains" of a bold daylight holdup gang, is credited by the University City officers as being the most desperate gunman in the East.

Galligan is charged with engineering three big Cambridge payroll robberies. These are: The Tyler Metal Company, the Spaulding Wire Company and the American Optical Company. Many thousands of dollars are involved in the three thefts.

Peanuts Galligan.

TAKEN AT GUN POINT.

Officials of the three companies positively identified Galligan as the leader of the holdup gangs responsible for the robberies.

Galligan is suspected of being the bandit who murdered George A. Willis, Paymaster of the Boston News Bureau, who was held up, robbed of $1,000, and shot to death last December.

Galligan was arrested by Inspector Daly of Cambridge at noon point, as Galligan was buying a ticket for New York in the South Station. Daly went to the South Station on a tip that Galligan was about to leave for the West. The inspector arrived just three minutes before the train for New York pulled out.

Rushing through the crowd with his revolver drawn, Daly surprised Galligan at the ticket window and pressed his gun into the alleged bandit's face. Galligan was the most surprised man in the big station.

BLUFF FAILS.

"What's the big idea, Tom?" he asked the inspector. The bluff didn't work. The two men had met on numerous occasions. On the way back to the Cambridge police station, Galligan was in a devil-may-care mood and continuously jested with his captor. He refused to take his arrest seriously.

Officials of the Manufacturers' National Bank were unable to identify Galligan as the robber who held up a messenger of that bank two months ago.

Acting on the advice of his counsel Galligan refused to answer questions put to him by the police.

CHICAGO TO N. Y. IN 81-2 HOURS

Garden City, N. J., July 27.—Eddie Stinson, accompanied by Charles Dickinson, president of the Aero Club of Illinois, and Arthur Gear, mechanic, arrived at Hazelhurst Field at 7:30 o'clock Eastern Standard Time today in the all-metal monoplane in which he left Chicago at 11:30 last night, completing in 8½ hours the first nonstop, three-passenger flight between the two cities.

SUSPEND POLICEMAN; ROBBERIES PROBED

Providence, July 27 (I.N.S..—Patrolman Joseph Brennan was suspended by Superintendent of Police William F. O'Neil today and ordered to appear before the board of police commissioners, Tuesday, to answer charges of violation of department rules. Brennan has been under investigation a week, following the charge of Italian business men that he had broken into an Atwell avenue store during the night. Many robberies in the Italian district the past three months remain unsolved.

POLICE TO SUPPRESS SPOONING ON BEACHES NEAR LYNN

CULPRITS ORDERED ARRESTED

Prodded by Angry Clergymen Officials Will Cleanse "Trail to Hell"

Prodded by the exposure of disgraceful conditions, the Metropolitan Park police department detailed five plain-clothes men to patrol Lynn, Nahant and Swampscott beaches, with orders to arrest on sight any couple indulging in unbecoming conduct or in petting parties.

The section referred to as a "Trail to Hell," because of its freedom from restraint includes the stretch of sand below the bath house and extending up to Eastern avenue.

Following a vigorous denunciation of conditions by the Rev F. Lewis Brooks, pastor of the Advent Christian Church, Lynn, mothers have planned concerted action offering their services as policewomen in an attempt to save young girls from treading the path that leads to degradation.

Bidding the beaches of sand lizards and painted vamps is the paramount issue in Lynn at the present hour. Several women's clubs have assured hearty co-operation. Twelve mothers of the Christian Advent promise to patrol the beach for at least one night a week. Everywhere from the western side of Lynn to the eastern the topic of clearing up Lynn Beach is discussed.

It is asserted that several Lynn and Swampscott mothers have complained to the police that their daughters have been accosted by well dressed men who offer bribes of candy and in some instances small sums of money to accompany them.

OFFERED 25 CENTS.

The Rev. Mr. Brooks says that he interviewed one child who told him a man had given her 25 cents and wanted her to meet him the following day.

The Rev. Howard B. Smith, also of Lynn, who is leading the fight to purify the beaches, says that the parked automobile is proving the worst aid to vice in recent years. According to the Rev. M. Smith the police make no efforts to observe what is taking place in these automobiles, with the result that specific instances are recorded where young persons of both sexes disrobe together with no regard for even elemental decency. In some cases, even, the curtains of the automobiles are only partly drawn, while the occupants are brazenly carousing, it is charged.

ONE SACRIFICED.

Recently a 14-year-old girl was sacrificed to a gang of beach hards, being lured to her fate by three older girls, themselves but recently recruited to a life of shame. That girl will soon reveal as much of her sordid story as it is permissible to relate to the public.

The Lynn clergymen who are sponsoring the drive for morality on the beaches believe that the girl's story will rally the entire State to the fight for reforms.

A girl reporter of the Boston American investigated conditions on the beaches named and found the charges of the clergymen were not exaggerated.

She was accosted 16 times by bathsome beach idlers, and that too in broad daylight, with no policeman in sight to whom an appeal might be made for protection.

WITHOUT RESTRAINT.

At a late hour the same reporter in the company of the Rev. Mr. Brooks and the Rev. Mr. Smith walked the same sandy stretch and viewed conditions that called for instant action by the police had there been any on duty.

"Lynn is a city of lodging houses," declared the Rev. Mr Smith. Mere lodgers can't confine themselves to their rooms, and so they seek the beaches, knowing them to be full of lucrative material which can be easily shaped to meet their whims and fancies with only a small bribery.

"We have no police protection. And if we have no law, we have no people.

CHURCH LOSING HOLD.

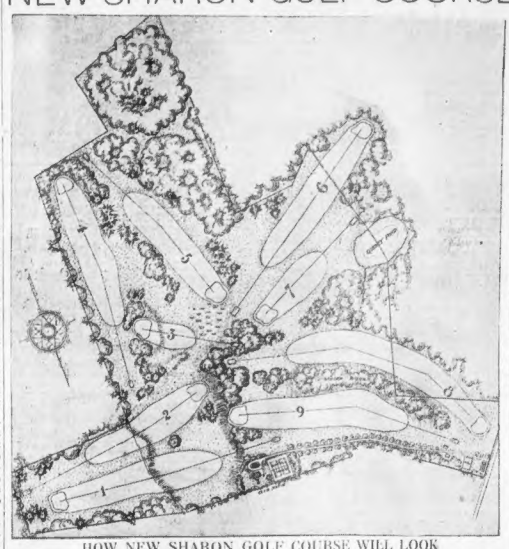
"The problem of the youth of today is the most vital of the nation. And the young of Lynn are in a pretty bad shape. We must tear them away from all they have acquired in the streets about sex and life, and instil a new thought.

"The church is losing its hold on the young, even faster than the home. The state of affairs is deplorable.

"Something has to be done, if Dr. Smith and myself must do it single-handed. I can't allow myself to see such goings-on without some attempt to cure the evil. I know whereof I talk. I have had innumerable cases of girls coming to me with their stories, mothers confiding in me of their disgraces."

Mrs. Grace L. Cannon of the Mizpah Social Club of East Lynn, composed largely of mothers, states that the beach situation will be considered at the club meeting, next Wednesday. She assures that the membership will vote unanimously to support the campaign.

NEW SHARON GOLF COURSE



HOW NEW SHARON GOLF COURSE WILL LOOK

Sharon Country Club has just arranged deal for new golf course to take place of present course. Work on greens is expected to start in about two weeks.

PLAN DENTAL CLINICS FOR LABRADOR KIDS

Miss Evelyn C. Schmidt, instructor of mouth hygiene of the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, will go to Labrador this Summer with Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell's annual health mission, to establish dental clinics for school children.

Miss Schmidt hopes to work out methods of teaching health problems to the children through games and other like means which the American Child Health Association has found so successful.

MYSTERY THIEF ROBS PHELPS

Winsted, Ct., July 27.—Who is the mysterious Raffles in the million dollar household of Luis J. Phelps, New York attorney?

Somebody has been systematically robbing the family for almost a year, and authorities have been unable to unearth a clew to the "Raffles'" identity.

In their town house, No. 441 Park avenue, New York, jewelry and silken lingerie have vanished.

Now in "Stonecrock," their Summer mansion in Colebrook, the thefts have continued. They total $6,000. Two servants have been discharged. One admitted stealing a silk "Teddy," but that is all. No trace of the jewels have been found despite a search of trunks of all servants.

TOWN ELATED OVER CLUB'S PROJECT

There is a subdued air of elation in and about Sharon. One would think there had been an announcement of a tax reduction. Or perhaps a manifesto of power to fight rates.

But no. It is a project vaster, more significant, more far-reaching in its consequences.

The Sharon Country Club is to have a new 9-hole golf course.

In the past the Sharon sons of St. Andrew, referring to their course, have never been able to say, "not bad." Matter of fact, the present course is, to put it mildly, "rough." Every golf course needs hazards, but the present Sharon course has nothing short of perils.

COMMITTEE ORGANIZED.

There has been much talk of a new, a better, a bigger course. The talk has been going on for years. Now it has been crystallized into action. A committee was organized. It consisted of the following:

Hamilton Mansur, chairman; Frederick W. Stockman, president; Walter White, secretary; Walter S. Morgan, treasurer, and Thomas S. MacMechin, John Stresenger, Richard Stetson, Walter E. Earle and Mr. Weston.

The committee arranged for the purchase of several acres of new land, new land evidently created by nature especially for golfing purposes. This will be combined with the old course.

Trees and rocks on the old course will be removed, new fairways built and Sharon will have a nine-hole course to compare favorably with any of the courses of similar size in the State. Wayne E. Stiles, golf course architect, has laid out the course.

STATISTICS OF COURSE

Enraptured members of the Sharon Country Club have been studying the following fascinating specifications of the architect:

LENGTH OF COURSE.

Hole	Distance	Par
1	370 yards	4
2	320 yards	4
3	150 yards	3
4	360 yards	4
5	335 yards	4
6	400 yards	4
7	225 yards	3
8	475 yards	3
9	405 yards	4
Total	3040 yards	35

Work on the greens starts in about two weeks. The course will certainly be finished by next Fall. Construction of the old course will not prevent play on the present course.

DEMAND FOR BEER VOICED BY SPENCER

St. Louis, July 27.—Sale of beer of low alcoholic content would end the unrest among thousands of working men who were accustomed to its use before prohibition, Senator Selden P. Spencer declared in a statement issued here. Manufacture of such beverage would vastly decrease the amount of distilled liquors now consumed, according to the statement.

REPORTS OF NEW INDICTMENTS IN WARD CASE

White Plains, N. Y., July 27. (I.N.S.)—Although the Extraordinary Grand Jury which indicted Walter S. Ward, son of the millionaire baker, for murder in connection with the death of Clarence Peters, young Haverhill, Mass., marlon, was not in session today, reports were circulated that further indictments in the case would be returned next week.

Ward, it was stated at the Westchester county jail, spent a quiet night, sleeping well. Today he had the usual jail breakfast although he was told he might send out for a special meal if he so desired.

Wilbur Chambers, deputy attorney general, today began preparation of the case against Ward, which is scheduled to go on trial Sept. 4. Chambers will question more than 100 witnesses. It was expected efforts would be made to bring Ward's parents and his wife into the jurisdiction of the court so they may be called upon to testify. Sherman has charged they have absented themselves from the State to block his efforts to have them testify before the grand jury.

MAN KILLED WHEN THROWN OFF AUTO

Worcester, July 27.—James J. Kinnane of No. 184 Prescott street, thirty years old, a machinist killed when he was thrown from the running board of an automobile on which he was being given a ride to work. No relatives have been located by the police. The body is held to await a claimant.

Tickled by Mate

ELSIE F. WHEELER.

Taunton, July 27.—Albert F. Wheeler, rich North Dighton farmer, arraigned in District Court charged with tickling his young wife, Elsie F., when she refused to allow him to remain in her room overnight, was found guilty and fined $10 by Judge Frederick E. Austin.

A nightgown and a housedress which Wheeler is alleged to have torn from his wife were displayed during the trial.

Wheeler denied that he had beaten his wife, declaring he had merely staged a "tickling party" in an attempt to bring about a reconciliation after a quarrel.

LOST 60 YEARS, WINTHROP MAN IS FOUND

Samuel McNaught disappeared from his home in Winthrop when he was eight years old. That was more than sixty years ago.

Today he communicated with his brother, John, of No. 26 Plummer avenue, Winthrop, the first heard of him since the early days of the Civil War.

Arrangements were made for a reunion between Samuel and his three brothers, John, George and Fred at Samuel's hotel in Seabrook, N. H.

A Boston salesman, passing through Seabrook, learned Samuel's story while eating dinner there. He told Alexander McRae of No. 29 Plummer avenue, Winthrop, who immediately sought John McNaught.

Just a few days before John enlisted, the younger brother went away. A search was made of the training camps without success.

TICKETS READY TOMORROW FOR BEACH TRIP

Six thousand mothers and children will go to Nantasket Beach next Tuesday, as the guests of the Boston American, 1,500 more than any previous day.

We know and have known for weeks that hundreds of people had been attempting for weeks to get their name-printed tickets, but in most cases they arrived at the established exchange stations after the tickets allotted to that point had been gobbled up.

To correct the system, and give everybody an equal chance, we have arranged to distribute all of the 6,000 tickets from the Devonshire St. side of the Boston American building.

LAST TRIP NEXT WEDNESDAY

Sailings next Tuesday will end the Mothers' and Children's Nantasket Trips for 1923. Whoever expects to take on this delightful sail under very economical conditions must be at the Boston American bright and early.

Each of the 6,000 will be passed out to the waiting persons in line, commencing at 8.00 A. M. on Saturday morning. If all tickets are not distributed by 5.00 P. M. on Saturday, the same office will be again opened on Monday at 8.00 A. M. and remain open until all tickets are gone.

SAIL RAIN OR SHINE.

All of the four beautiful steamers will sail on schedule time as follows:

Boats leave Rowe's Wharf at 8.30 A. M., 9.00 A. M., 9.30 A. M., 11.30 A. M.

Returning, leave Nantasket at 2.30 P. M., 3.30 P. M., 4.15 P. M., 5.00 P. M.

WHAT TO REMEMBER.

Two or three important things should be read and remembered.

NO BABY CARRIAGES ALLOWED ON BOARD NEXT TUESDAY.

NO TICKETS SOLD ANYWHERE EXCEPT AT THE BOSTON AMERICAN BUILDING.

NO PERSONS BROUGHT BACK FROM NANTASKET ON ANY OTHER BOAT THAN THAT SHOWN ON YOUR TICKET.

IF YOU WANT YOUR FAMILY OR PARTY TO TRAVEL TOGETHER ON THE SAME BOAT, SEE THAT YOU HAVE TICKETS OF THE SAME COLOR.

HAVE YOUR TICKETS HANDY, IN YOUR HAND, WHEN YOU ARE ABOUT TO GO ABOARD YOUR BOAT. KEEP THE LINE MOVING.

MORE FREE TREATS.

In spite of the big increase in Boston American guests next Tuesday,

H. P. HOOD & Sons have promised that everyone shall have his or her bottle of their pure pasteurized milk. In another column you will see a picture of the three big Hood trucks that took down the milk last Tuesday.

BERWICK CAKE COMPANY will play their part again, providing many varieties of their well-known cakes, serving same from their trucks as before, under the supervisions of the "Berwick Kiddies," Henry and Wyckie.

SAGAMORE BATH HOUSES—Open house at the popular Saguamore plant next Tuesday. A trip to Nantasket without a swim is like bread without butter. Dry proposition. There will be plenty of room for everybody.

WONDERS FOR KIDDIES.

FARRAGUT PARK will throw open its gates to the holders of Boston American Identification Tags. The children and ladies have always found many new and wonderful things to the world famous park.

HOOD'S ICE CREAM TREAT—Not only does the great Hood concern furnish pasteurized milk to everyone, but will also see to it that each and every guest has a generous helping of their famous "old-fashioned ice cream." Imagine that—5,000 helpings of ice cream!

Tomorrow is the day of the last ticket distribution. Stay in line, keep the line straight, be orderly.

EVERYTHING COMES TO HIM WHO WAITS. And next Tuesday's trip will have about "everything" that a child could desire. See that your children get theirs.

13 Nurses Punished for Bobbing Hair in Worcester

Worcester, July 27.—Because thirteen student nurses at the City Hospital bobbed their hair they are now paying the penalty.

Their punishment is that they must not wear their caps while on duty; permissions which have been granted them from time to time to be away from the hospital all night have been revoked; they cannot go home after dark; they cannot sleep or even eat with the other nurses, and they must eat with the hospital aids.

LONE BANDIT YOUTH ROBS SEVEN IN AUTO; GETS $31,500

Chicago, July 27 (I.N.S.)—A youthful bandit, working alone in a small closed automobile, early today held up and robbed Mr. and Mrs. Julian Kline of Chicago, Mrs. Louis Bigelow of New York, a sister of Mrs. Kline; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Levy of Chicago and Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Adams, obtaining a large amount in cash and jewels, bringing the total value of his loot to about $31,500.

Adams was struck by the bandit when he accidentally sounded the horn of his automobile after having been held up. He was sent to a hospital minus several teeth and suffering from a probable fracture of the jaw.

THREE MORE ATTRACTIVE GIRLS AFTER CHARMING TITLE

BEAUTIES SEND IN ENTRIES

Friends of Miss Coyle, Stenographer, Boosting Her for Atlantic City Honors

Three attractive young women from South Boston, Ashmont and Brockton have entered the Boston American's CHARMING GIRL tournament in the hope of winning the free trip to Atlantic City during the September pageant. The week's trip, with all expenses of winner and chaperon of her own selection, paid by the Boston American could not be duplicated for hundreds of dollars.

The three latest entrants include Miss Helen Coyle, a 22-year-old stenographer living at No. 471 Fourth street, South Boston. She is one of the most popular girls in the Peninsular district and her friends are boosting hard for her to win. She was nominated for the week's free trip to America's greatest seaside resort by an admiring friend.

Another of the newest entrants is Miss Sylvia Hart, 24, of No. 30 Beaumont street, Ashmont, a blonde of unusual fascination. Her friends regard her as one of the loveliest and most charming girls in the Ashmont district. Friends of 17-year-old Esther Engstrom of No. 83 South Leyden street, Brockton, believe she has an excellent chance of representing the city of Boston at the Atlantic City Fall pageant. She was nominated by one of her admirers.

BEAUTIES ON THE SAND.

When the Boston American photographer appeared on the sands of Nantasket Beach to give the girls glimmering there an opportunity of entering the tournament by making free pictures of them, he found plenty of material. Many of the girls who were snapped appeared to be irresistible. It is plain that the judges are going to have a big job on their hands determining who is the MOST CHARMING of all entered.

The American photographer was to appear at Head House, City Point, South Boston, for two hours today beginning at 1 p. m., to make snapshots of girls in that and neighboring districts who desired to enter the tournament. As South Boston has always been famous for its bewitching girls the photographer expected a busy time.

FUN FOR WINNER.

The remainder of the American photographer's schedule follows:

Tomorrow, Wollaston Beach.

Sunday, Salisbury Beach, on beach near main entrance.

Monday, Revere Beach, on beach in front of State Bathhouse.

He will be present at the above places on the days specified from one to three p. m. Any girl who wants to enter the tournament will be photographed without cost. Just speak to the photographer and he will do the rest.

"Miss Boston," as the winner will be termed, is going to have the time of her life at Atlantic City with its ten miles of boardwalk, its glorious surf, its famous hotels and its myriad of attractions. She will not have to spend one cent during the entire week. Neither will her mother. All expenses of both will be paid by the American, including railroad fares, hotel suite, meals, automobile rides, seaplane flights, yacht rides, rolling chair rides, luncheons, dances, theatrical performances and all sorts of boardwalk amusements.

She will compete against the most charming girls from sixty cities for the national beauty title of "Miss America," which carries with it a fine silver cup and a golden mermaid statue, thirty-six inches long, made from pure gold. This reclining figure is valued at $5,000. And think of it, girls! If you have the necessary qualifications you may land a $10,000 job in the movies. Motion picture company officials will be present in search of girls for new productions. The trip may be the medium through which you will achieve stardom in the movies. Why not try it? WOMAN ASKS PROBE OF ASYLUMS yoke, husband of Mrs. Orrell, that this woman was committed to the insane asylum.

For some years the couple had been estranged. She had left him and gotten employment in a Springfield weaving mill. She had worked hard, saved her money and accumulated a little fund of $1700, which is on deposit in a Holyoke savings bank.

It was this savings account, Mrs. Orrell says, which induced her husband to railroad her, as she charges, to the insane asylum.

Soon after the incarceration of Mrs. Orrell, her brother, Thomas J. Moyette of No. 47 Samoset street, Holyoke, began a fight for her release. At the asylum it was stated that Mrs. Orrell had never shown any traces of violence, and within a year after her commitment, officials at the hospital stated, she was in such condition that it would be safe to release her.

COUNTED THE MINUTES

"I was sane when I came to the hospital," Mrs. Orrell says, "but it is doubtful if I could have remained sane after the awful experiences of living among a lot of gibbering lunatics. It is a miracle that my mind didn't break under the strain. I can't describe the life there, because it's indescribable.

"It's not that I received poor treatment from the people at the hospital. They did everything they could to make me comfortable. But the night after night of listening to the calls and shrieks of the other inmates made life unbearable for me.

"I used to count the minutes each day, waiting for the arrival of my brother, and listening to what he had to say about the right to obtain my freedom.

"It was not until Judge Long granted the petition dismissing my guardian that I could be called sane. Yet today, legally, I am insane. And I don't know of any legal way in which I may again be called sane. One of the two physicians who signed a certificate declaring me insane is dead.

ONLY WISH A REFORM

"I hope that out of my sufferings there may arise a reform in which it will no longer be possible to deprive people of their liberty without full and complete court procedure.

I don's say that the two physicians who signed the certificates declaring me insane were bribed. But I do say that my husband deliberately railroaded me to the asylum, and my brother will bear me out."

Moyette, the brother, substantiates his sister's version.

"Shortly after my sister was sent to the asylum I met her husband," he says. "I upbraided him for what he had done. I told him that Mary was ailing in years—she was then about fifty—and that it was a cruel thing to do, as she had never been in any way violent or a menace.

"He had the nerve to admit that he himself wasn't sure that Mary was insane. He said he had committed her in order to find out whether she was really sane or insane. But I know why he did it; he wanted to get his hands on that little savings account of Mary's.

A representative of the Boston American called on Mrs. Orrell. He found her looking much younger than her years would indicate, but her hair was white. She explained that.

URGES STATE PROBE

"It wasn't white when I first entered the asylum," she said simply.

"I hope that some good will come out of my experience. Do you know what I would like to see happen?

"I would like to have the Legislature order an investigation of the institutions for the insane throughout the State. I would like to see a competent committee appointed, and I would like to see that committees visit every insane institution throughout the State. I would like to see them investigate every case.

"They would find out many extraordinary things. Judge Long is right—I was not the only person sent to an asylum."

REFSUES TO SEE HIS DAUGHTER WED ACE

Paris, July 27.—Mrs. Consuelo Hatmaker, daughter of Mrs. Nellie Sands DeLamar Hatmaker Waters, will celebrate her nineteenth birthday next Tuesday by being married to Captain Charles Nungesser, famous French ace, in the little English church at Dinard, but her father will not attend.

Chas. Nungesser

Having failed to obtain his daughter's promise not to wed for at least another year, when parental objections would have been lifted, Mr. Hatmaker has announced to his friends that he has nothing to do with the couple, and leaves the duty of giving her away to the husband of the former Mrs. Hatmaker, who was married only recently to Captain William Waters of Paris.

'PEEPING TOM' IS SOUGHT ON CAPE

Plymouth, July 27.—Residents in a section of this town have been terrorized by the nocturnal activities of a "peeping Tom." Male residents have banded to protect the neighborhood and threaten bodily harm to the peeper if they trap him. One woman says she was awakened early Sunday morning by a noise. A moment later she saw the face of the "peeper" framed in the window. Her son, summoned by her cries, recognized the prowler as a man suspected in similar cases.

"WIFE TO MEET 3 MATES IN HEAVEN"

Dorothy Gordon's Fortune to Seek Sanity

WIFE PLANS 'CELESTIAL REUNION'

"We'll All Be Friends in Heaven," Says Mrs. Trayes, Named in $398,000 Suit

Mrs. Helen J. Trayes, named in octogenarian Mary Card's suit to save something of the ruins of a once $398,000 estate, has had three husbands.

Her present husband, Asa Trayes has had four wives.

What will happen when they all meet in Heaven?

The question was brought up today by Mrs. Trayes in an interview with a reporter of the American.

"I expect to have a happy reunion with my three husbands in Heaven," she said.

"All of them?" gasped the reporter.

"All of them," repeated the lady, "and," she added, with a twinkle in her eyes, "they will be glad to see me, too."

The reporter could not locate Mr. Trayes to determine if he was looking forward to a celestial picnic with his four mates.

"GOOD FRIENDS IN HEAVEN."

While Mrs. Trayes has been named by the aged Mrs. Card as having maltreated her of at least one-third of the big estate, Mrs. Trayes believes that bad feeling on her old friend's part will disappear in Heaven, and they will be good friends once more. In fact, she may be a guest at Mrs. Trayes' husband reunion.

Others named by the woman whose Mansfield estate has been reduced to six acres are Attorney Clarence A. Barnes, former Yale baseball player, and Howard F. Butler, Boston attorney, who once managed Mrs. Card's affairs, and who still addresses the octogenarian as "Mother."

The suit is being heard before a master. Testifying, Mrs. Card told how Mrs. Trayes' friendship began when the Card fortune was gone.

"I always believed Mrs. Trayes was honest," she said in a remarkably firm voice. "I never dreamed the papers they were constantly giving me to sign were transferring my fortune to them."

During the long friendship, Mrs. Trayes was deluged with gifts from Mrs. Card, according to the testimony of both.

Mrs. Trayes testified she felt she had a right to 100,000 as her own from the card properties and told how she took an order to Butler, signed by Mrs. Card, and demanded this amount he turned over to her.

Chevrette Barnes

"What right had you to demand $100,000?" Attorney Crowley asked.

"I didn't demand it," Mrs. Trayes hastily replied. "It was a pleasure for Mrs. Card to give it to me. She loved me."

NEVER OFFERED AID.

Mrs. Card, in cross-examination, said she had never retained any attorney other than Attorney Butler except when she placed a $4,000 mortgage on her home.

"Did Mrs. Trayes ever offer to let you have the money so you wouldn't have to mortgage your home?" counsel asked Mrs. Card. "Never, not one penny," Mrs. Card answered promptly.

RED FLAG STIRS LEGION IN I.W.W. DOCK STRIKE

New York, July 27.—The red flag of the I. W. W. today flew unmolested over the headquarters in Hoboken, N. J., of the Marine Transport Workers, No. 510, directly opposite the piers used by the United States army. No American flag was on the building.

Indignant citizens prepared a protest to the authorities against what they termed a "direct insult" to the entire country. Commander Jackson of the Hoboken Post of the American Legion declared his Post would take immediate action.

Paul A. Vaccarelli, former vice-president of the International Longshoremen's Association, and once the head of New York City's building laborers, announced he would be the guiding force in the United Cargo Workers of Greater New York and vicinity, a new organization composed of International Longshoremen and I. W. W.

According to Mr. Vaccarelli, the organization which made its first appearance on the docks yesterday, will try to win the striking Hoboken longshoremen away from the I. L. A. and at the same time save them from the dangers of joining the I. W. W.

NANTASKET BUS HITS AUTO; 7 INJURED

Seven were injured when a bus operated by the Atlantic House, Nantasket, collided with a light sedan on the steep grade on Atlantic avenue, Nantasket.

The injured:

Mrs. Frank Nowak, Cedar street, Norwell, removed to the Sturgis Hospital unconscious and badly cut and bruised.

Mrs. Anna Nowak, mother-in-law of Mrs. Frank Nowak, removed to the Sturgis Hospital unconscious with numerous cuts and bruises.

Miss Elizabeth, last name unknown, a sister of Mrs. Frank Nowak, suffered minor injuries and was badly shaken up.

Three daughters of Mrs. Frank Nowak, ranging in age from five to eight years old, were severely injured. They were also taken to the Sturgis hospital.

Dr. John Bottomley, Beacon street, Boston, passing with his wife in his automobile, administered first aid to the injured, while Mrs. Bottomley telephoned for an ambulance.

The Atlantic House bus had just left the hotel on one of its regular trips. There were no occupants other than the driver. The bus was overturned and badly damaged.

Frank Nowak, Cedar street, Norwell, owner and driver of the sedan, escaped uninjured. His car was demolished.

BROWNING GIVES LIE TO WIFE

Produces Paris Police Cards to Show She Registered at Hotel With Wilen

By RUTH DAYTON.

New York, July 27.—Edward W. Browning, millionaire real estate operator today hotly denied that he had "double-crossed" his wife, Nellie Adele Browning, now in Paris, or that he had an ungovernable temper, or that he had ever been fond of young girls.

In an interview in Paris Mrs. Browning declared that Mr. Browning had agreed that she go to Paris and get a divorce quietly and it was only after she was gone that he began an American divorce and accused her, a defenceless woman, of being in Paris as the wife of Charles Henry Wilen, her dentist.

She declared that it was quite by accident that Wilen sailed on the Olympic at the same time she did. She also said that Harry Wolcher was her business manager and that he sailed with her on the Olympic.

SHOWS HOTEL CARDS.

By way of refuting Mrs. Browning's statements, Mr. Browning laid some Paris police cards on the table and said:

"In Paris, every one who registers at a hotel must be identified and must give a history of himself on such a card as this, a copy of which is turned over to the Paris police."

Mr. Browning handed over the cards. One was a record of Adele Wilen, wife of Charles Henry Wilen, twenty-eight, coming from New York, born in New York, and the other was a card with Charles Henry Wilen's name heading it, occupation—student, coming from New York, born in New York. Seventy-five such cards were records of the Imperial Hotel, Paris, where Mrs. Browning gave her interview, saying she was staying with friends outside of Paris.

Other cards made out in the same way were records of the Chambord Hotel.

Mr. Browning continued:

"Mrs. Browning says she never has been registered as Wilen's wife in Paris; that I am doubly crossing her and making false accusations against a defenseless woman, and that she and I had arranged for her to get a divorce in Paris.

"If that is so, I want to know why she went away secretly on a faked British passport, that Harry Wolcher, Wilen's best friend, helped her get, under the name of Mrs. Harry Wolcher.

"As a matter of record, Wolcher did not sail for Europe until July 15, and Mrs. Browning and Wilen left on June 30.

MOTHER KEPT IGNORANT.

"And why did Mrs. Browning not tell her mother she was going to Paris, as she said she did, if it was all arranged for her to get a divorce. What happened was that her mother did not know where she was when she left any more than I did.

"There was never at any time anything said about her getting a divorce and I know nothing about her going away. The day before she left, she packed up and instead of coming out to the country, as she told me she was going to do, she went to Europe.

"I know all about Wilen, and when I found out about what had happened, through detectives here and in Paris, I started proceedings for a divorce."

MRS. D. L. C. HURD.

Pittsburgh, July 27.—Jack V. Hurd, prominent in club circles, was recommended a divorce from Dorothy L. Campbell Hurd, former woman golf champion of the United States, Great Britain and Canada, in a master's report filed in Common Pleas Court here.

Mrs. Hurd formerly represented the Belmont Spring Club of Belmont, Mass.

Evidence introduced at the hearing indicated that Mrs. Hurd was an "inveterate golfer," who preferred outdoor life on a golf course to the duties of housekeeping.

"I believe it certain," the master said in his report, "that she loves golf and indulges in it to the exclusion of her marital relations, and that she is determined to discontinue the latter.

CHARGE WOMEN LED GUN RAID

New York, July 27 (I.N.S.).—Following their arrest several hours before, Mrs. Edna Hobbs, an expensively dressed nineteen-year-old hostess, and Miss Anna Majewska, a pretty twenty-year-old blonde, both of Brooklyn, today were placed in the lineup at Brooklyn police headquarters charged with homicide and robbery.

The police assert the two young women led two armed men to an early morning bandit raid upon the apartment of Dominick Notarnicola, beating him savagely until his screams frightened them into flight.

The police further add that Joseph Fantanelo, eighteen years old, of Brooklyn, who also appeared in the lineup charged with assault and robbery, was one of the two men. An additional charge of violation the Sullivan weapon law was lodged against them. The other man escaped.

WORLD TO BE COMBED FOR CURE

Heiress' Guardian Disputes Pathologists' Claim That Case Is Hopeless

John M. Donoghue, Lowell attorney, and newly-appointed guardian to Dorothy Gordon, has pledged her entire fortune in an effort to restore the heiress to sanity and bring her to the road of health.

Dorothy Gordon's case is hopeless, physicians say. Despite the fact that she will soon be released from McLean Asylum, Waverley her mental condition is much worse than when her uncle, John Gardiner of Baldwin, N. Y., waged his famous legal battle to be appointed her guardian and to be made custodian of her property.

Dorothy Gordon

In the face of the opinion of pathologists, who declare that his ward cannot be restored to sanity, Donoghue is resolved to test every resource and explore every channel in an effort to banish insanity which has warped her brain.

In compliance with the desires of Miss Gordon's two aunts, Miss Catherine Hughes and Mrs. Emma M. Anderson, Attorney Donoghue will spend the whole fortune of $500,000, if necessary, in combing the world for the best medical talent and the best surgical resources which can be found.

Expense will be nothing, he says, if there is the slightest hope of her recovery.

With the ou ing of William F. Jardine from the Gordon Supply Company, a new president will be appointed to succeed him. It is believed that Donoghue will act as president himself, inasmuch as he owns two-thirds of the stock as Dorothy's guardian.

PUTS HEAD ON TRACK; TRAIN CUTS IT OFF

Plainfield, N. Y., July 27.—George Craven, Plainfield, Conn., farmer, committed suicide today by laying his head across a railroad track as a freight train was approaching. The body was severed. He had been brooding for a week. He left his place of business here about ten o'clock today and paced up and down beside the Jersey Central tracks. Suddenly, as a freight train approached, he was seen to throw himself to the ground with his head over the rail.

JOHNSON REPUDIATES 'LANDSLIDE' STORY

New York, July 27 (I.N.S.)—Branding it as "a gross fabrication," United States Senator Hiram Johnson today made denial to published statements that he has said he "would win by a landslide" in the event he secured the Republican nomination for President in 1924.

The statement was attributed to him by George Harvey, Ambassador to Great Britain, who had a talk with Senator Johnson here yesterday. The Californian expressed amazement when it was called to his attention.

VETS' BUREAU HOPES TO SAVE $20,000,000

Washington, July 27.—Expenditures of the Veterans' Bureau have passed the peak, in the opinion of Director Hines, who said today he would be greatly disappointed if he was not able to bring about a reduction of $20,000,000 next year. Since he became director, March 1, General Hines declared reduction in rentals amounted to $800,000 a year.

A young and beautiful woman creates a sensation at a first night in New York by rising in her seat at the theatre and coolly surveying the audience through her glasses, after the European fashion. Clavering and his friend, Dinwiddie, are immediately interested, and the latter receives a shock, declaring that she is the image of a former society belle, Mary Ogden, though much younger than she should be at that time. He thinks she may be a daughter. Clavering suggests that a society leader, Mrs. Oglethorpe, be asked to solve the mystery. She consents and calls on the fair unknown, but learns nothing. Clavering follows Mary home from the theatre and aids her to get into the house as she has lost her key. She invites him in and tells him she is Countess Josef Zattiany. She asks him to dinner.

READ ON. THE THRILLS COME FAST

"WELL—youth is a beautiful thing—is it not?" He smiled into her own beautiful face. "But, if you will notice, many of our novelists, capable of real psychology, carry their heroines over into their second youth, and you can almost hear their sigh of relief when they get them there."

"Yes, but they are still behind the European novelists, who find women interesting at any age, and their intelligent readers agree with them. Young women have little psychology. They are too fluid."

"Quite right. But I am afraid we are too young a country to tolerate middle-aged heroines. We are steeped in conventionalism, for all our fads. We have certain cast-iron formulae for life, and associate love with youth alone. I think we have a vague idea that autumnal love is rather indecent."

"And you—yourself?" She looked at him speculatively, "Are you too obsessed?"

"I? Good lord, no. I was in love with a woman of forty when I was seventeen."

His eyes were glowing into hers and she demanded abruptly: "Do you think I am forty?"

"Rather not!"

"Well, I am young," she said with a deep sigh of content. "But look! I see nothing, but I see everything."

Clavering glanced about him. Every neck in the boxes and neighboring seats were craned. It was evident that the people in front—and no doubt behind—were listening intently, although they could have caught no more than any occasional word of the murmured conversation. Eyes across the aisle, when not distended with surprise, glared at him. He laughed softly.

"I am the best hated man in New York tonight." Then he asked abruptly: "If you wish to avoid fashionable society why not see something of this? It would be quite a new experience and vary the monotony of books and plays."

"I may—some time, if you will kindly arrange it. But I am not a stranger to the cognoscenti. In London, of course, they are received, sought after. In Paris not so much, but one still meets them—the most distinguished. In Berlin the men might go to court but not the women. In Vienna—well, genius will not give quarterings. But alas! so many gifted people seem to come out of the bourgeoisie, or lower down still—whether they are received or not depends largely on their table manners."

"Oh, I assure you, our cognoscenti have very good table manners, indeed!"

"I am sure of it," she said graciously. "I have an idea that American table manners are the best in the world. Is it true that one never sees toothpicks on the table here?"

"Good lord, yes!"

"Well, you see them on every aristocratic table in Europe, royalty not excepted."

"One more reason for revolution—— Oh! Hang it!"

The lights had gone out. Clavering half rose, then settled himself back and folded his arms. A man stood over him. "Just take my seat, Billy, won't you?" he asked casually of the eminent critic. "It's only two back."

The eminent critic gave him a look of hate, emitted a noise that resembled a hiss, hesitated long enough to suggest violence,

She becomes engaged to Standish.

NOW GO ON WITH THIS ENTHRALLING STORY.

FROM the time when Dr. Osterhout assured her of her secret's safety, Pat knew that she must tell her fiance, before the wedding. Some quirk of feminine psychology would have justified her in concealment, so long as there was risk. The chances of the game! But to go forward upon the path of marriage in perfect safety and with an unsuspecting mate—that was, in her mind, mean. Curiously, too, that restless, morbid craving to know what exciting thing would result, pressed her. The daring experimentalist was rampant within her. How would Monty take it? What would he do?

. . . How should she tell him? . . .

Opportunity paved the way. A group of her set were at Holiday Knoll on a Saturday evening, discussing the local sensation of the day. Generously measured highballs had been distributed, and in the dim conservatory, lighted only by the glow of cigarettes, they discussed the event. A betrothed girl of another set had committed suicide after the breaking of her engagement and gossip ascribed the tragedy to the inopportune discovery of an old love affair. With the freedom of the modern flapper, Margaret Thorpe, half lying in the arms of Nick Torrance on the settee, declared the position:

"It was the Teddy Bear business. Two years ago we all thought they were engaged."

"Weren't they?" asked someone.

"More or less," asseverated the sprightly Miss Thorpe. "Chiefly more, from all accounts. Then Johnny Dupuy came here to live, and she shifted her young affections to him and caught him."

"Do you think he found out about Teddy?"

"Sure—like—a—Bible."

"How?"

"Why pick on me for a hard one like that?"

"Perhaps she told him," suggested one of the other girls.

"She wouldn't be such a boob; no girl would," offered a languid girlish voice.

"It'd be the square thing to do. This was a masculine opinion, and jejeune, even for that crowd.

"Don't know—yah" declared Miss Thorne, meaning to express her contempt for this view. "It was up to Dupuy to look in the mare's mouth before he bought."

The discussion placed about the subject with diverse opinion—a prurient relish, the final conclusion of the majority being that the fiance had "got wise" and the girl had killed herself because he broke the engagement. "As any fellow would" (Monty Standish's contribution, this last).

"What if she did go to him and own up?" suggested Selden Thorpe.

"It'd be just the same," opined Standish. "He'd have to quit."

"Oh, I don't know. It doesn't follow."

"Wouldn't you?"

"I don't know that I would. It depends."

"You'd be a pretty poor sort of fish if you wouldn't."

"Maybe, if I thought as you do. But we don't all think the same."

"Some of us don't think at all," put in Pat acidly. "We just talk."

"Meaning which, Treechy?" inquired Torrance.

"Oh, nothing"

"I know John Dupuy," proceeded Thorpe. "He isn't just exactly the one to draw lines too strictly."

"I grant you that Johnnie would never win the diamond-set chastity belt of the world's championship," said the daring Miss Thorpe, and elicited a chorus of appreciative mirth.

Pat did not join in it. She was thinking fast and hard.

After the rest had gone Monty stayed on, as of right. Something in Pat's expression struck even his torpid perceptions, as he put his arm around her and drew her to him for the customary "petting party."

"What's all the gloom about, sweetie?"

She released herself not overgently. "Monty, would you have done what Dupuy did?"

"How do you mean?"

"Broken off your engagement—on that account?"

"Why, yes. Any fellow would." A convincing reason for him.

"Selden Thorpe wouldn't."

"I'll bet he would. He's a bluff. He makes me sick."

"Well—then—you'd better break ours."

"I don't get you, Pat."

"It's been the same with me as with Elsie Dowdon. I've been meaning to tell you."

His voice was incredulous, contemptuous.

"Why isn't it the same thing?"

Young Mr. Standish suffered a paralysis of scandalised amazement. "Because it isn't! For God's sake! You talk like one of those radical freaks that spout on soap boxes."

"I'm not so sure they aren't right about this man-and-woman thing," declared Pat recklessly. In so speaking she felt that she had broken with conventionalities far more than in anything, however bold, previously enunciated in their talk.

Monty's square jaw became ugly. "I'm giving you your chance. You won't tell the man's name?"

Pat preserved the silence of obstinacy. It was more convincing than any negative. Also was more exasperating.

"Good-night!" bellowed her lover, and strode from the room.

Almost immediately he was back, replied with a sad and noble expression. "Nobody shall ever know about this from me, Pat. You're safe."

For three nights Pat washed her troubled soul with tears. Her family knew that there had been a lovers' quarrel; that was all. Pat waited for Monty to break the engagement formally or send her word that he wished her to break it. Through all her grief of bereavement which, she repeatedly told herself, was the most sorrowful depth that her life had yet touched, that any life could touch, she impatiently awaited the definite solution. Relief from the strain of uncertainty; that was what she craved.

On the fourth evening Monty reappeared. All his nobleness was gone. He was haggard, nervewracked, forlorn. He threw himself upon her compassion. He implored her. He would forgive everything; he would forget everything; he would make no conditions, if only she would take him back. Life without her——"

"All right, Monty-boy," said Pat, really affected by his suffering. "I haven't changed. I love you, Monty. But if ever you let what I've told you make any difference, if ever you speak of it or let me know that you even think of it, I'm through. That minute and forever."

Voices and Faces

DRAWN BY PEGGY PRENTICE

Copyright 1923, by King Features Syndicate, Inc. 7-27

OUT of space—on the wings of the air—come voices that awaken dreams and by their enchantment paint pictures in the gallery of the mind of the one who listens.

To match the lovely tones—twins of the beautiful melodies—rise faces which are the ideal counterparts of the voices that enchant the ear.

Into the room where he alone is listening to the wonders of the radio, come visions that complete the miracle and yet bring a perplexity—which face is the loveliest? —PEGGY PRENTICE.

Intimately Revealing the Life of a Modern and Precocious Society Flapper

"I don't believe it," he said violently. "It's a try-on. A trick."

"It's true. You've got to believe it."

"I'll never tell you."

He gathered his powerful frame together as if to spring upon her. If he did, if he beat her to the ground, choked her into helplessness, Pat thought, she would hate him and love him for it. But his rage ebbed, impotent of its culmination, a little pitiful, a little ridiculous.

"Wh-wh-what did you do it for?" It was almost a whimper.

"I don't know. I didn't mean to at the beginning."

"Did you love him?"

"Yes. I thought I did."

"You love him now," he charged, his fury mounting again.

"I don't! I love you."

"This is a hell of a thing to tell a man you say you love," he faltered plaintively.

"You'd rather I hadn't told you. I'm not built that way! I had to tell."

Instantly he was suspicious. "Had to? Why did you have to?"

"No, for any reason that you'd understand." The slight emphasis on the "you" was the first touch of bitterness she had allowed herself.

"Wouldn't he marry you?"

"I wouldn't marry him."

Monty perceptibly brightened. Pat's womanly intuitions, supersensitised by the strain of the contest, told her why. If, to his male standards, she was a maiden despoiled, she was at least not a woman scorned; her rating had gone on sensibly.

"Where is he now?"

"I don't know. I haven't seen him for a long time. I'll never see him again."

"Pat," with an air of resolute magnanimity—"if you'll tell me who it was I'll marry you anyway."

At that her pale cheek flamed. "I'm not begging you to marry me, Monty. I'm not that cheap in the market."

"You want our engagement broken?"

"That's up to you. Absolutely. If you think, now I've told you, that you're so much better and purer than I am because I've done what I did——"

"What do you mean, better and purer?"

"I suppose you've never had any affair with any girl——"

"Are you trying to pretend to believe that's the same thing?"

His voice was incredulous, contemptuous.

"Why isn't it the same thing?"

Young Mr. Standish suffered a paralysis of scandalised amazement. "Because it isn't! For God's sake! You talk like one of those radical freaks that spout on soap boxes."

NEW AGE OF ICE

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

IT is reported that an investigation is about to be undertaken among the Alaskan glaciers with the view of ascertaining whether any signs can be detected of the approach of a new age of ice. In connection with this it has been said that during the last seventy years there has been an advance of the glaciers, which may be a sign of the approach of cold and of glaciation in the northern hemisphere.

But it is doubtful if there is any general advance of the glaciers. In some places they have advanced, and elsewhere they have receded in recent times. A true "ice age" would involve a great deal more than simply an increase in the bulk and length of existing glaciers flowing down from eternally snow-clad mountains. Its characteristic feature would be the covering of vast continental areas with a permanent burden of snow and ice.

If we knew what the principal cause of an ice age was it might be possible to predict its coming long in advance—but that we do not know. Theories are hotly contradictory and unsatisfactory. General elevation of a continent would unquestionably lower the temperature of the atmosphere covering it, and if the elevation were sufficient it would become permanently snow-burdened, just as high mountains do for a similar reason.

More appealing all around seems the astronomical theory which rests upon certain periodical alterations in the form of the earth's orbit and the position of its axis of rotation with reference to the sun. But if this theory is accepted we would seem to be safe from a new glacial invasion for a good many thousand years to come. On the other hand, the southern hemisphere ought now to suffer from glaciation which, in fact, it does not (except near the pole), and when facts oppose theories the latter must be abandoned or a satisfactory explanation of the discrepancy must be found.

Those who maintain the astronomical theory think that such an explanation is furnished by the fact that the southern hemisphere is an oceanic one, and the ocean always modifies climate, while the northern hemisphere is a land one, and broad continental areas always promote extremes of climate. Consequently, they say, although the southern hemisphere now has its Winter when the earth is farthest from the sun (aphelion), it does not suffer from that condition as the northern hemisphere will do some eleven thousand years hence, when its turn will come to have Winter with the sun at its maximum distance. A perihelion Summer (nearest the sun) is short and hot, and an aphelion Winter long and cold, and the effects of the latter are calculated to overbalance those of the former and so tend to glaciation.

TELL THESE AT DINNER

A woman had engaged a manservant who was new to his job, and among other things she had instructed him to always bring anything into the drawing-room on a tray.

A visitor called one day with a large and ferocious-looking dog, which was left outside. When the visitor was about to go, however, his hostess wished to see the dog, so she rang the bell and told the man to bring it in.

Some minutes elapsed, but he did not appear. Suddenly the sound of angry growls, snarls and barks was heard, so the bell was rung again, and the man entered carrying the tray, but with a look of distress on his face.

"Pardon me, madam," he said, with a deferential cough, "but I could not indooce the hanimal to sit on the tray. 'E knocked me down three times and bit my leg somethin' cruel. If the gentleman wants 'im, 'e's still outside."

Father—I bought a new gown for you today, Flossie. Madame Bon Bon said she would send it up right away so you can wear it to the party tonight.

Flossie—Oh, daddy, you shouldn't have done that.

Father—That's true, I should have let you pick it out yourself.

Flossie—That isn't it; I don't need one. The one you bought me last month is in fine shape, and I won't need another one for a long time yet.

FOXY GRANDPA STORY

HERMIT CRAB FINDS HOME

"WELL, we've certainly had a hard time to find a place to suit us," I said wearily, as we left the real estate agent's office after I had signed the lease for the cottage at the seashore for the Summer.

"Let's go down to the beach and take a nap," suggested Bunny.

"Fine!" Monty and I agreed.

So down to the beach we slowly walked, found the hull of a wrecked ship and stretched out in the shade.

I was just dozing off when Bunny pulled my sleeve. I woke up rather crossly, but when I saw the look in his eyes, I knew that something of interest was to be seen. And there surely was, as you'll agree when I tell you what we saw.

There, crawling along the beach, was the funniest looking crab you ever beheld in all your life. He had great big front claws which seemed so heavy he could hardly drag them along, and sticking out of his head were two very long feelers.

"A hermit-crab!" whispered Bunny, as Bobby and I lay as still as two mice. "Watch him, but don't move or he'll run away."

The hermit-crab crawled over to a group of conch-shells which the tide had just brought in. They were empty, that was why he was after them, as we discovered. Because a hermit-crab doesn't bother to build his own house. He takes one that has belonged to someone else and has been vacated.

There was Mr. Hermit-crab hunting a new home. But wait until you hear how he did it.

He was so particular that he didn't take the first house he saw! No. Indeed, he examined several vacant shells before he decided to try one.

Then he turned over on his back, lifted the shell on his legs, twirled it around and balanced it as if we were trying to find out exactly how much it weighed. Then he poked all around in that shell with his feelers. It didn't suit him, so he dropped it and went on to the next shell.

This shell he picked up, twirled several times in the air, and tested it. Then he walked backward with the shell and paraded up and down the beach with it on his back. But this shell didn't suit him, either. He must have had a dozen different shells.

"He's having a worse time than we had choosing a cottage," I whispered to Bunny.

It was almost train-time, and I was afraid we wouldn't see him in his home, when suddenly into a shell Mr. Hermit-crab popped, exactly as though he'd been shot into it by a gun! Then he covered the opening with his great claw, which made a perfect door.

He had finally found a summer cottage to suit him, so we started for the train.

"We're all fixed for the summer now, aren't we, Foxy Grandpa?" Bobby chuckled. "Even Mr. Hermit-crab."

Year's Best Selling Novel Reveals Mysterious Return of Youth and Beauty to Old Woman

"Will you tell me how you always manage to get one of these prize seats?" asked Clavering at the fall of the second curtain. "Nothing in New York is more difficult of attainment than a good seat—any seat—for a first-night. All these people, including myself, have a pull of some sort—know the author, star, manager. Many of us receive notifications long in advance."

"Judge Trent has a pull, as you call it."

"That explains it. There has been almost as much speculation on that point as about your own mysterious self. Well, this time I suppose I must. But I'm coming back."

He gave Mr. Dinwiddie his seat and went out for a cigarette. The foyer was full of people and he was surrounded at once. Who was she? Where had he met her? Dog that he was to keep her to himself! Traitor! He happened to know Judge Trent, who was her trustee.

His acquaintances with the lady was only a week old. Well, he hadn't thought to mention it to such friends as he had happened to meet. Been too busy during up matter for that infernal column. Yes, he thought he could manage to introduce them to her later. She had brought no letters and as she was a Virginian by birth and had gone abroad in her childhood and married a foreigner as soon as she grew up she knew practically no one in New York and didn't seem to wish to know any one.

But he fancied she was getting rather bored. She had been here for a month—resting—before she even went to the theatre. Oh, yes, she could be quite animated. Was interested in everything one would expect of a woman of her Intelligence. But the war had tired her out. She had seen no one but Judge Trent until the past week.

He took one eye on dignified resentful Abbott, who refused to enhance his triumph by joining his temporary court, and slipped away before the beginning of the last act. Dinwiddie resigned his seat with a sigh but looked flushed and happy.

Poor Old Codger

"Poor old codger," thought Clavering as he received a welcoming smile, and then he told her of the excitement in the foyer.

"But that is amusing!" she said. "How naive people are after all, even in a great city like New York."

"Oh, people as active mentally as this crowd never grow blase, however they may affect it. But surely you had your triumps in Europe."

"Oh, yes. Once an entire house—it was at the opera—rose as I entered my box at the end of the first act. But that was a thousand years ago—like everything else before the war."

"That must be an experience a woman never forgets."

"It is sometimes sad to remember it."

"Dinwiddie tells me that your cousin, who was Mary Ogden, once had a similar experience. It certainly must be a sad memory for her."

Great Beauty

"Yes. Mary was one of the great beauties of Europe in her day—and of a fascination! Men went mad over her—but mad! She took growing old very hard. Her husband was handsome and attractive, but —well, fortunately he preferred other women, and was soon too indifferent to Mary to be jealous. He was the sort of man no woman could hold, but Mary soon cared as little about him. And she had her consolations! She could pick and choose. It was a sad day for Mary when men left her for younger women."

"But I thought that European men were not such blind worshippers of youth as we are?"

"Yes, within reason. Mary was too intellectual, too brilliant, too well-informed on every subject that is discussed in salons, not to attract men always. But with a difference! Quite elderly women in Europe have liaisons, but, alas! they can no longer send men off fairly howling for the author of the first authentic success of the season." Clavering and Madame Zattiany went swiftly up the aisle. A few others also hastened out, less interested in authors than in taxi-cabs.

He handed her into her car and she invited him to enter and return with her for a sandwich and a whiskey and soda. He hesitated a moment. "I'll go with pleasure," he said. "But I think I'll walk. It—it would be better."

"Oh" A curious expression that for the second it lasted seemed to banish both youth and lovelines spread even to her nostrils. Sardonic amusement hardly described it. Then it vanished and she said sweetly: "You are very considerate. I shall expect you."

He did not walk. He took a taxi. She opened the door as he ran up the steps. "I never ask my servants to sit up," she said. "Judge Trent warned me that the American servant is as difficult to keep as to get and must be humored. When I think of the wages I pay these pampered creatures and the amount of food they consume, and then of my half-starved friends in Austria, it makes me sick—sick!"

There being no reply to the dramatic truth involved in these words, Clavering followed her silently into the library. The log fire was still burning and he hastily replenished it. They took their little supper standing and then each helped themselves in easy chairs on either side of the hearth.

"Why don't you bring over your own servants?" he asked. "Time and democracy might ruin them, but meanwhile you would have comfort. Surely you brought your maid?"

"I've had no maid now since the beginning of the war. I rarely left the hospital. Heaven knows where my other servants are. The young men were mobilized and those that returned alive were either killed in the revolution or turned revolutionists themselves. No doubt the new government would have turned Mary's palace in Buda Pesth into a tenement house if it had not still been a hospital. We left during the revolution and lived in Vienna. Servants with the virus of Bolshevism in their veins would be worse than those."

"Were you ever in danger?"

"Oh, many times," she said indifferently. "Who was not?"

"Was that what broke your cousin down?"

Mary Half Starved

"That and the hard work in Vienna trying to relieve the distress—while half-starved herself. Of course we had almost no money until the United States Government restored our properties."

"Will she join you here when she is well?"

"No, Mary Zattiany will never be seen again."

"Ah? As bad as that! Her friends will be distressed. I understand they saw her abroad from time to time before the war—particularly Mrs. Oglethorpe. That old set is very loyal."

"Loyal! Oh, yes. They are loyal. Mrs. Oglethorpe was ready to give me over to the police. She seemed to think that I had murdered Mary—no doubt during the revolution, when it would have been quite easy. And she seemed to resent quite bitterly my resemblance to Mary in her youth—as if I had committed a theft."

"Probably it made her feel her age. I wonder you saw her."

"I was coming down the stairs as she crossed the hall. Be sure I would not have seen her if I could have avoided it."

Impertinence

"Why?" His left his seat restlessly and leaned against the mantelshelf. "That sounds impertinent. All my questions have been impertinent. I am afraid. But—I should warn you—I gather that both Mr. Dinwiddie and Mrs. Oglethorpe think there is something wrong—that is, unexplained."

"Really?" She looked intensely amused. "But that is interesting. Of course I know of Mr. Dinwiddie's curiosity from Judge Trent—but I rather thought—"

"Oh, yes, you have forced him completely. But I fancy he's more curious than ever. I—I—wish you would confide in me. It might be better able to defend you if the necessity arose."

"Do you believe I am what I represent myself to be?"

"It is a terrible thing to say to a woman like you, but—"

He expected her to rise in her most majestic manner, turn him from the house, but she merely smiled again and said:

"You forget Judge Trent. Do you think if I were an impostor he would vouch for me?"

"I believe you could make any man believe what you wished him to believe."

"Except yourself."

"Bombast that a newspaper man—However, I'll speak only for myself." He thrust his hands into his pockets and tried to summon his saturnine expression, but he had an uncomfortable feeling that he looked merely wistful and boyish and that the highly accomplished woman of the world was laughing at him. "For my own sake I want to know," he blurted out. "I haven't an idea why I suspect you, and it is possible that you are what you say you are.

"Certainly you are far too clever not to have an alibi it would be difficult to puncture. But I sensed something that first night —something beyond the fact that you were a European and did a curious thing—which, however, I understood immediately . . . It was something more.

"I don't think I can put it into words . . . you were there, and yet you were not there . . . somebody else seemed to be looking out of your eyes . . . even when Dinwiddie thought he had explained the matter . . ."

Illegitimate Daughter

"You mean when he assumed that I was the illegitimate daughter of Mary Zattiany. Poor Mary! She always wanted a daughter—and that it, when her own youth was over. That is the reason she was so fond of me. Do you think I am Mary's bastard?"

"I did—I don't now . . . I don't know what to think . . . I have never lost that first impression—wholly."

She stirred slightly. Was it a movement of uneasiness? He was horribly embarrassed, but determined to hold his ground, and he kept his eyes on her face, which retained its expression of shocking amusement.

"But you think I am an adventuress of some sort."

"The word does not apply to you. There is no question that you are a great lady."

"Of course I might be an actress," she said coolly. "I may have been on the stage in Vienna when the war broke out. It is not necessarily associated with Countess Zattiany, won her confidence, acting to the extraordinary resemblance our blood may have had and mingled in Cro-Magnon days—stolen her papers, led her to talk of her past—of course every one knew Countess Zattiany's record in European society—forged her power of attorney with the aid of an infatuated clerk, poisoned her —and here I am?"

He laughed. "Fully plot for the movies. That is a new angle, as they say. I hadn't thought of it. And a good actress will put over anything. I once heard a movie queen, who was the best young aristocrat, in looks and manner, I ever saw on the screen, say to her director—repeating a telephone conversation—'I says and he says and then I seen he hadn't heard me.'"

For the first time since he had known her she threw back her head and laughed heartily. Even her eyes looked young and her laugh was musical and thrilling.

Then she demanded "And do you think I am an actress—who got an education somehow?"

"I think you are an actress, but not that sort. Your imaginative flights leave me cold."

"Perhaps you think I had Mary's personality transferred and that it exists side by side with my own here in this accidental shell. There are great scientists in Vienna."

"Ah!" He bowed at her sharply. "Button, button—I feel a sensation of warmth somewhere."

She laughed again, but her eyes contracted and almost closed. "I fear you are a very romantic young man as well a very curious one."

"I deserved that. Well, I am curious. But not so curious as—interested."

"I hope you are not falling in love with me." Her deep voice had risen to a higher register and was light and gay.

Half in Love

"I am half in love with you. I don't know what is going to happen—"

"And you want to protect yourself by disenchantment?"

"Perhaps."

"And you think it is my duty to—"

"Possibly I'd fall in love with you anyway, but I'd like to know where I stand. I have a constitutional hatred of mystery outside of fiction and the drama."

"Ah." She gazed into the fire. "Mr. Winwiddie, no doubt in making investigations, if he verified my story, would you still dislike me?"

"I should know there was something back of it all."

"You must have been a good reporter."

"One of the best."

"I suppose it is that."

YOUR BEAUTY

NEW SERIES OF PRACTIAL VALUE.

By Maria Jeritza

HAVE you ever "jumped rope?" Surely you did in little-girl days. You were probably very proud of your achievements along that line and knew several variations of the usual skip. And you were doubtless at that time as slim and unconsciously graceful as a young kitten.

Later you decided that you were too old and dignified to frolic about. You were "almost a young lady." And perhaps soon afterward you began to be painfully aware of your own feet and elbows, and you may have overheard your big sister smilingly refer to the awkward age you were going through.

It never occurred to you that there might be a connection between your suddenly-acquired self-consciousness and your decision not to play any more. Yet there was an obvious connection —just the difference between the grace of the natural and the awkwardness that results from repression of natural activity.

Nowadays we are going back to the simple outdoor activities of childhood in order to keep childish grace. Why not try skipping the rope again? There is no exercise better for the ankles and legs, and to give you light alertness of carriage.

The only equipment you will need is a rope of convenient length. Part of a clothes-line will do. Practice outdoors if you can. But even though you cannot manage this, you will find that ten minutes before your open window skipping rope will send you to your bath in a fine glow, feeling as fresh and young as when you were a child.

And superfluous fat will melt away rapidly from your legs and ankles.

There are ever so many ways of improving the contour of the lower limbs. Jumping rope is one of the best. But dancing, swimming and fencing are also good.

Correct methods of walking and standing are extremely important. If you tread heavily on your heels and stand with sagging knees, clumsy ankles and thick knees will be a natural result.

When our hearts are bounding with whole-hearted hope and gladness, our feet hardly touch the ground, we are so alert and graceful.

Would you win back again the slim symmetry of your early youth? Then try to think and act with more of the gladness and happy expectancy of your childhood. Live mode, as you did then, in the out-of-doors. And don't forget to skip, if you wish slender ankles.

CORRECT MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Is it correct for a young professional man, when accompanied by his wife, to speak to two young ladies, his clients, without a male escort, or should they go and speak to him?

One of my friends is deeply hurt, and is changing her lawyer because when he meets her outside, he stares at her and does not speak or make any sign of recognition.

I tell her that she is entirely wrong and that she ought to go and speak to him first, even it it takes some effort.

YOU are correct. No matter what the circumstances, the lady is always given the privilege and honor of acknowledging an acquaintanceship. It is, therefore, the lady who bows first. The lawyer is recognizing this fundamental rule of etiquette when he waits for your friend to acknowledge acquaintanceship with him. Maybe while she is thinking that he is unwilling to "man a spunk of recognition," he is thinking the same of her.

She does not necessarily have to go to speak to him. If she bows to him he will probably come to speak to her.

Jim himself arrived so shortly after Betty left that I wondered if they had met and Mac was thinking of me so intently, friend husband?" I laughed.

"Because I've an idea of what you're going through dear," said Jim tenderly, coming and taking me in his arms as gently as if I were a child. "You loved Phoebe almost as dearly as Jeanie and I did. You've been brave enough about her going—to touch me deeply. But this business of Neal's disappearing without a word must about kill you. I want you to feel I'm standing by."

"If you'll stand by—Jim, I can go through anything," I answered. His arms tightened about me.

"I'll try to make up to you for everything," her murmured.

When Jim and I got home from my office, we found Jeanie and Pat already at our apartment. Jeanie was in a nervous, high-strung condition. Pat, also, was in a state of tension. I could guess that he'd been all afternoon trying to raise the money to take up the option for the Tompkins' strip of ground and that so far he'd failed. I found myself getting into a correspondingly discouraged frame of mind.

But the sturdy sweetness with which Jim had come to me at the office triumphed dauntlessly over all the morbidness in the air. I've never seen him finer and cheerier. I remembered suddenly and wistfully that in the days of war he had been called "Fearless Jim of the Flying Forces." And now there was a sort of winged dauntlessness in his face and manner.

When we went into the living room after dinner he suggested a game of bridge. Jeanie chose to be shocked.

"Surely you wouldn't play cards so soon—after——" she protested, her voice trailing off into a manner of distaste.

"We're after having—other fish to fry," cried Pat explosively. "Tis the merry, merry sunshine you've been all through dinner, Jim. And so I'm thinking 'twould be wise to consult you now. Of the lot of us you seem—most normal."

WAYS OF A HUSBAND

By Ann Lisle

TOWARD the end of the afternoon, however, I was so nearly exhausted I could hardly wait the time to go home. And I was twice as eager when a telephone message came from Jim saying that he'd call for me in a taxi as soon as I was ready to start. I controlled my anxiety to shirk and run away with Jim, and said I'd not be ready for another half hour or so.

Just after I finished talking to Jim Betty came into my office with a strange expression on her face.

"Ruth Gregory's outside," she announced uneasily. "She is calling for me to go down to her home stew on the Sound for dinner and the night. She thought you might like to have me convey her sympathy."

"I'll go out and speak to her," I forced myself to say.

"Oh, no—she's downstairs," Betty replied. "She only came in for a moment and—you were on the wire. She had to hurry along to get some difficulty with her little car straightened out."

Betty kissed me tenderly. Then she ran away. I got a queer sense of resentment at the thought of Miss Gregory coming into my office and not waiting to speak to me. And then I had an odd sense of triumph. For I realized it must have been Jim to whom I was talking while she waited for me to receive her.

Jim himself arrived so shortly after Betty left that I wondered if they had met and Mac was thinking of me so intently, friend husband?" I laughed.

"Because I've an idea of what you're going through dear," said Jim tenderly, coming and taking me in his arms as gently as if I were a child. "You loved Phoebe almost as dearly as Jeanie and I did. CRIQUI CONGRATULATES DUNDEE ON VICTORY

By EUGENE CRIQUI

New York, July 27.—I fought a better man and I lost. I congratulations to Johnny Dundee, for he is a good clever fighter. I did my best, but it wasn't good enough

My thanks must go to the American public for the kind treatment they gave me during my stay here.

I leave for home within a few days, but will return later when I hope to get a chance at the title which Johnny Dundee won from me.

Extra! Jack Conway Was Wrong on the Fight

Extra! Extra!

Jack Conway was wrong and we're glad he was wrong.

For Johnny Dundee, the new world's featherweight champion is an American and his title stays in America and we're for Americans and America, first, last and all the time.

Dundee is a sportsman of the highest calibre and a credit to the great Italian race, of which he is a worthy descendant.

Jack Conway wanted Dundee to win and was for him but did not think Johnny could be strong under the necessity of reducing to the featherweight mark.

We must pay tribute to Criqui for his courage and gameness and for his willingness to risk his world's title to go to France.

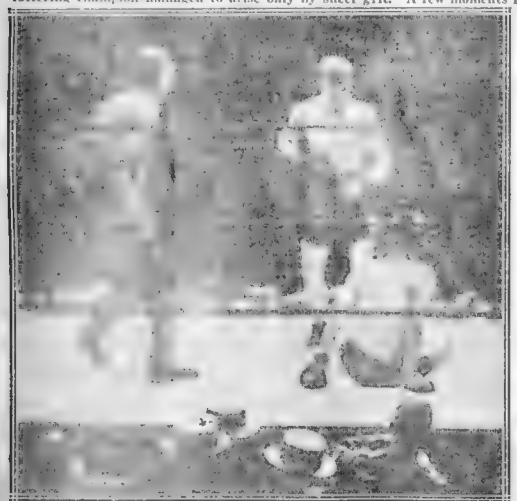
THE FIRST KNOCKDOWN—It came about the middle of the first round, and it was a winding left hook that dropped Criqui, just an instant after he had landed his own left on Dundee's jaw. The hero of Verdun pulled himself into fighting position again by bracing both hands on the floor of the ring. Dundee stepped back after the knockdown, permitting Criqui ample space to arise.

DOWN FOR THE THIRD TIME—The second round was a stormy session for Criqui, and here he is seen taking the final knockdown of the series that lasted through the first two rounds. The tottering champion managed to arise only by sheer grit. A few moments later the bell saved Gene.

DUCKING OUT OF TROUBLE—It was the old bouncing, ducking, dodging Dundee that bobbed in and weaved through Criqui's defense, to land almost at will. Toward the close of the twelfth round Dundee performed all of his well-known ring antics, and Criqui looked sheepish.



DOWN, BUT NOT OUT—Tony Vacarelli was the winner in his six-round bout with Harry Zerbey, but you wouldn't believe it if you were told the fighter sitting down is Vacarelli. Tony bumped into a left hook.

"BURCH" CAN SYMPHATHIZE

Owners of the Syracuse club in the International League are experiencing the lot of Fred Burchell, the old Red Box southpaw who once owned that club. They stand to lose $40,000 this season.

Ride in the Peerless and Learn What Owners Call a New Experience

"New Cars For Old"

Many car owners have taken advantage of our suggestion to trade their cars in part payment for a New Peerless.

In the last month we made more actual deliveries of New Peerless cars than ever before in an equal period of time. Most of these sales involved a trade.

But still we say it is good policy because:

(1) We must keep our stock of used cars low. Our organization has facilities for disposing of more than 1000 cars annually.

(2) We want you to enjoy that new experience of owning a New Peerless.

We never "hedge" when it comes to trading. We allow full value for used cars. May we have the opportunity to prove this and at the same time demonstrate the superiority of the New Peerless.

We Are Not in Any Used Car Trade Agreement

Owners of the New Peerless go a long step farther than either ourselves or the makers.

They declare that nowhere in all their motoring experience have they encountered anything like its riding and performing qualities.

When you take your ride—which you may arrange at any time—you will be impressed with the steadiness with which the car holds the higher speeds, and the marked ease and buoyancy of its riding.

Today you may call upon your car for the simplest routine, tomorrow for a week-end trip, and tomorrow for your extended vacation tour—but no matter how little or how great the task you set, you desire above all else to have it performed with that unfailing reliability that the Peerless has made so peculiarly its own.

It is this reliance in the performance of the car combined with the great luxury that it possesses that makes your ride in the New Peerless what owners call a "New Experience."

If you would like to inspect and ride in a car as deliberately designed for the individual as the most expensive custom-built automobiles, you will be heartily welcome.

After all, only the car itself can tell adequately what Peerless has accomplished. May we expect you?

THE FIRST KNOCKDOWN—It came about the middle of the first round, and it was a winding left hook that dropped Criqui, just an instant after he had landed his own left on Dundee's jaw. The hero of Verdun pulled himself into fighting position again by bracing both hands on the floor of the ring. Dundee stepped back after the knockdown, permitting Criqui ample space to arise.

DOWN FOR THE THIRD TIME—The second round was a stormy session for Criqui, and here he is seen taking the final knockdown of the series that lasted through the first two rounds. The tottering champion managed to arise only by sheer grit. A few moments later the bell saved Gene.

DUCKING OUT OF TROUBLE—It was the old bouncing, ducking, dodging Dundee that bobbed in and weaved through Criqui's defense, to land almost at will. Toward the close of the twelfth round Dundee performed all of his well-known ring antics, and Criqui looked sheepish.

MR. GALLAGHER and MR. SHEAN

THE Boston American awards each week an original Gallagher & Shean drawing to the reader who sends in the best Gallagher & Shean lyric.

One is selected for publication in this column every day, and on Saturday the selection of the best one is made and a drawing is mailed the winner.

Today's selection, which will be among the six from which the winner will be selected this week, is by Frank Governor, No. 18 Hollander street, Roxbury, Mass.

Oh Mr. Gallagher, Oh Mr. Gallagher!
My new bootlegger called me up last night.
He has got some brand new stuff,
Which he claims will cut up rough,
He alleges it has a kick like dynamite.

Oh, Mr. Shean; Oh, Mr. Shean!
Are you sure he isn't selling you benzine?

No, his reputation's known,
By the liquor he has shown.

On the level, Mr. Gallagher!
ON THE LABEL, MR. SHEAN!

Address your lyrics to Gallagher & Shean, care of the Boston American, No. 80 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

LECTURETTES

This is the age of petting larceny. The Democratic and Republican parties are out of date and the petting party is in the cushion.

The profiteer is petting his wallet and the consumer is kissing his good-by. The politicians are talking sweet, the landlords are sitting sweet, and the sugar kings are feeling sweet.

Life savers are hugging their job and the prettier the job the tighter they hold 'em. The radio fan snuggles close to his radio and gets low whispers in return. Even the millionaire's servants say the boss and his wife are pretty close.

Robbers continue to pet their victims with nice blackjacks, and conductors still manage to stroke down a few fares every now and then. Any night one may see couples under the moonlight caressing the mosquitoes. Love is sitting on a keg of dynamite with a sledge hammer for an umbrella, while thunder and lightning are throwing kisses at each other.

HEROES

Whoever it was that borrowed the shoestrings of your Sunday shoes.

The jazz artist who started to practice on his saxophone just as you were about to propose to the One and Only.

The truck driver who stalled his bus right on the street car track when everybody was in a hurry to get to work.

The fat man in front of you at the movie show who stood up to stretch at the most interesting part of the picture.

The politician who gave a picnic for the firemen on the day that your house caught fire.

The guy who drew cards in the poker game just for the fun of it and caught a full house.

EVOLUTION

A barber might have once been a wild hare.

A milkman possibly descended from a milkweed.

A carpenter came from a boxwood tree.

A train announcer evoluted from a hyena.

Medbury Says—

By John P. Medbury

THIS is the time of year that mothers are going to Europe hunting husbands for their daughters.

OF course there are lots of eligibles over right here in this country, but a woman can bring about a husband that's imported.

HE may be no good mentally, but he's great socially.

SHE doesn't care whether he's got brains or not, she wouldn't give him a chance to use them.

ONE woman was so optimistic when she went to Europe to look for a husband, that she only bought a one way ticket.

BUT the guy she found was so broke that she had to pay his way back too.

HE was a duke and next year she's going to return him and get two counts.

ONE mother went over there and brought back five guys and let her daughter take her pick.

BUT her daughter was so hard to please that the mother had to make another trip and bring seven more before she was satisfied.

THE daughter not only got a titled husband for herself, but she got one for all of her girl friends, too.

SHE brought the man to this country so she had to do something with them.

IT wouldn't be right to turn them out and let them starve to death.

SHE got one of them a job here and he wanted to go back to London for his overalls.

HE said he'd go to work if it killed him. It didn't kill him but he's unconscious.

IT'S unwise for a girl to marry a foreigner, because if he gets lost you've got to look all over the world for him.

OF course you could advertise but the dame who found him might not bring him back.

IT'S funny how some society women will go all the way over to Europe and look for a husband to support.

AMERICAN girls ought to marry Americans. There are plenty of men right here in town who are perfectly willing to settle down and loaf.

BE SYSTEMATIC IN SAVING FOR VACATION.

Last year when you returned from your summer outing minus a bank account or perhaps with an "over-drawn" notice in your mail, you determined to be caught thus—"never again."

Each week you would lay aside enough to provide for your yearly vacation expenses, and you meant to keep this resolve.

For a few weeks you carried this on, then you let it drop. So here you are again, about to take your vacation, not enough money to do as planned, and your checking account depleted.

Now what are you going to do in regard to next year's vacation?

Isn't this same old routine getting monotonous?

Will you leave debts unpaid when you go away because you need the money—your last few weeks' pay, to use on your pleasure jaunt?

Again you will be worried all through your recreation period for fear something will happen to expose your lack of funds.

Some system of savings, if consistently followed, might have prevented this condition with its depressing effect on your mind, but you are too easy-going, too mentally lazy, too much given to letting your desires control you to be able to quit your foolish and expensive ways throughout the year, to become systematic in your saving.

WE WONDER

If when Nero was a child he didn't play with matches.

If the Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe didn't use shoelace curtains.

When the stork flies over the rooftop why he doesn't make a return trip with a perambulator.

If there'll ever be a drive to stop drives.

If a flea ever walks in his sleep.

Why the steel workers aren't willing to do their share when the directors have to work 12 hours a day cutting their coupons.

FORBES' VIEWS on FINANCE

—By B. C. Forbes—

Honestly, wouldn't you imagine from much of the present inordinate writing and talking about low prices for wheat, that wheat was about the only thing of value produced by our farmers?

The truth is—and it should be published far and wide—that wheat constitutes less than 10 per cent. of the total value of our annual crops and a mere 6 per cent. of the total value of the gross wealth produced by our farmers.

* * *

Wheat is not even the most valuable single crop raised on American farms. Corn usually is worth twice as much as wheat. Hay and forage rank far ahead of wheat.

Cotton, flint and seed also greatly outrank wheat in dollars and cents.

* * *

This little table, specially prepared from official sources by O. P. Austin, statistician of the National City Bank of New York, for the exclusive use of this column, shows at a glance the place wheat takes among our various crops:

1922 CROPS
Corn	$1,900,000,000
Hay and forage	1,370,000,000
Cotton, lint, seed	1,060,000,000
Wheat	479,000,000
Oats	360,000,000
Tobacco	263,000,000
Potatoes	262,000,000
Apples	100,000,000
Beets (1920)	100,000,000
Wool (1920)	80,000,000
Rye	80,000,000
Miscellaneous	1,952,000,000
Total	$8,991,000,000

Then there is another "crop that brings to the farmer's pocket far more than half as much as all these crops combined, namely, live stock. Happily, prices for farm animals have not been as unsatisfactory as prices for wheat. You will see how important this consideration is when you glance at the relative gain during the recent years of our total crops and our live stock products.

	Value of Crops Produced	Live Stock Products
1918	$ 6,152,750,000	$3,776,750,000
1919	6,111,604,000	3,753,877,000
1920	6,907,182,000	4,452,000,000
1921	5,004,450,000	4,357,000,000
1922	6,322,982,000	4,452,000,000
1918	14,351,000,000	8,957,000,000
1919	14,750,910,000	8,957,000,000
1920	16,900,000,000	9,339,000,000
1921	7,936,000,000	5,339,000,000
1922	8,991,000,000	5,849,000,000

* * *

Getting back to wheat, which has assumed exaggerated importance during recent days, current discussion of the general business position and outlook, it will help to correct false ideas and to keep the record straight if we study the following table showing the annual value of our wheat crop and comparing it with the gross wealth produced on our farms:

	Gross Farm Wealth Produced	Value of Wheat Crop
1910	$9,037,301,000	$661,000,000
1911	8,819,119,000	763,063,000
1912	9,562,790,000	585,189,000
1913	8,849,315,000	763,000,000
1914	8,984,681,000	878,880,000
1915	10,777,000,000	1,025,112,000

These figures are presented, not for the purpose of belittling the seriousness of the drop in wheat prices to $1 a bushel in Chicago, and consequently to, roughly, 80 cents on the farm, but for the purpose of correcting widespread misapprehension concerning the role wheat fills in our agricultural scheme of things.

A lot of people and newspapers have been talking as if, no matter what prices the farmers receive for anything else or everything else they produce, the general business of this country would not continue even half-way satisfactory if dollar wheat should continue.

Careful study of the figures here given will tend to explode this theory.

* * *

If optimism were fashionable at present, instead of pessimism, talk would all be, not of the relatively low prices ruling for wheat, but of the wonderfully fine prices obtainable for the most valuable of all our crops, corn. Corn lately has been selling 25 per cent. above the quotation ruling twelve months ago. Only this week corn touched a new high price for the year. And remember that the farmers produce three or four bushels of corn for every bushel of wheat.

* * *

Agricultural conditions are not, of course, wholly satisfactory, but neither are conditions in any of the most everyone in today eagerly painting them.

Sharp Drives Carry Hill Rails to New Lows and Unsettle Whole N. Y. List

BEARS START NEW WAVE OF SELLING

A fresh outburst of selling of the Hill roads, Great Northern preferred and Northern Pacific, unsettled the whole list during the first half of the session on the New York Stock Exchange. Bears forced the issue and selling was fairly heavy.

Northern Pacific collapsed 1½ points to 53, the lowest quotation since 1900 and a fall of more than seven points so far this week. Great Northern slumped 1¾ points to 69½, the cheapest since 1896. This was a reaction of eight points for the week. Both of these stocks at this level were around 22 points under the 1923 high.

Chicago, Northwestern trailed along with a dip of 3 points to 56½. This was also the lowest mark for 1923. Minneapolis & St. Louis, which has just gone back to cash ship for the second time, gave away fractionally to 1¾, a new bottom price.

Standard Oil of California broke more than a point to 48⅞, a new 1923 low. Cession continued to work downward and shed 2 points, small hit the lowest price for 1923.

Elsewhere movements generally favored the downward side. Schulte stores was an exception. This stock ran up over two points.

Mullins Body, Hupp, Hudson, Mack Trucks, Marland Oil, Reading, Foundation Co., Kelly Springfield, Pan-American, Canadian Pacific, Sears Department Stores, Republic Iron & Steelware among the principal issues in the reactionary movement.

BUY A MILLION MARKS FOR 90 CENTS

New York, July 27.—Marks sold for 90 cents a million, the lowest quotation in history. Before the war, when the nominal exchange was 23.8 cents each, 1,000,000 German marks would have cost $238,000.

Except for the purchase of remittances by relatives and friends in Germany by residents of this country, there is practically no business here in the exchange, which, from a commercial standpoint, is worthless.

Commercial business with Germany for months has been transacted on a dollar basis or in the currencies of Great Britain, Switzerland, Holland or the Scandinavian countries.

Recent cable reports from Berlin stated that printing presses were grinding but marks at the rate of more than two billion daily in an endeavor to meet the gigantic demand.

WEAKNESS IN COMMODITIES HURTS TRADE

"The feature of the business situation is the weakness of commodity prices says Moody's weekly review of financial conditions.

"Not merely the conspicuous commodities like wheat or cotton, but also scores of others are breaking in price. This movement is of major importance because finished goods follow the trend of commodities and both margin of profit and interest rates depend upon the main swings of commodity and goods prices."

Replies to Investors

Boss stocks queries, with stamped, self-addressed envelope, to Frank H. Melson, Financial Editor, Boston American, No. 89 Summer

ARMOUR.

To MRS. C. M., Atlantic:

Armour of Delaware preferred stock is not the highest type of industrial stock by any means. We have contended all along that the element of business risk contained in it makes it unsuitable for the average conservative investor, and recent developments have not altered our opinion. Dividends on Electric Bond and Share preferred and New York Central stock are payable February, May August and November 15. The Electric Bond and Share stock is callable at 110 on ninety days' notice. American Ice preferred receives dividends January, April, July and October, and, so far as we can determine, is not subject to call. Inasmuch as you have only a small amount, it is not advisable to divide it between two issues. Take the Electric Bond and Share stock.

NORTH AMERICA.

To C. W. E., Brockton:

The North American Company is a holding company interested in Wisconsin, Ohio and Missouri public utility properties. It also holds a substantial interest in Boston Edison and United Railways of St. Louis. The company is organized on a sound plan and is well managed.

BOND LIST.

To Vincent, Easton:

Since your demands are so conservative it is a simple matter to suggest bonds containing a good degree of safety. We suggest New York Central 5s, 2013, yielding 5½ per cent.; Brooklyn Edison general 5s, 1949, yielding 5.4 per cent.; Cincinnati Gas and Electric general and refunding 5s, 1956, yielding 5.3 per cent.; Bell Telephone of Pennsylvania first and refunding 5s, 1948, yielding 5.2 per cent.; P. Lorillard debentures 5s, 1951, wielding 5.4 per cent.; Pocahontas Consolidated Collieries 5s, 1951, yielding 5.4 per cent.; and Western Union 6½s, 1936, yielding 5½ per cent.

ANN ARBOR 6s.

To Miss F. F., Fitchburg:

The present position of Ann Arbor 6s reflects not only inadequate earnings power in past years but also a decline in net operating income during the first five months of 1923 when the railroads of the country as a whole were enjoying unusual prosperity. Net for the first five months amounted to $57,781 as compared with $116,230 in the corresponding period of 1922. Despite the fact that this is a first mortgage bond it does not deserve a high rank as an investment.

RECEIVER FOR MINN & ST. L. RAILROAD

Minneapolis & St. Louis, for which a receiver has been named in Minneapolis, has shown deficits for five successive years, and its sudden failure was entirely unexpected, rumors of increasing financial difficulties having been prevalent for some time.

Some improvement was made this year, but it was only to reduce the deficit after charges for first five months to around $350,000, or about 30 p. c. from last year, and doubts were expressed as to ability to meet interest and tax payments due September 1.

In previous years the company borrowed at banks for this purpose and repaid them after the grain movement, from which it derives a large part of its earnings. Until recently officials had hoped that the anticipated heavy movement the company would be able to tide over this period, as in former years.

Minneapolis & St. Louis has had a varied career, this being the second time it has been in receivership. It was reorganized in 1916 as a consolidation of the old Minneapolis & St. Louis and Iowa Central & Western.

It has authorized capital stock of $20,000,000, of which $25,792,000 was issued for purposes of 1916 reorganization. Holder of old preferred was entitled to $70 in new stock and also option to purchase for $20 additional new common amounting to $80. Holder of old common was entitled to receive $23 in new stock and purchase for $20 new stock to amount of $78.

The company has outstanding $42,821,956 bonds and notes and $3,621,859 equipment trusts.

PRODUCTION OF SILVER FACES BIG DEMANDS

The use of silver in arts and manufactures has developed into an important factor in the silver market, making constantly growing demands on silver production, according to Robert Linton, president of North Butte Mining Company.

"The amount of silver required for use in arts and manufacture," says Mr. Linton, "has shown a steady increase, rising in the United States from 13,217,284 ounces in 1906 to 48,252,656 ounces in 1918, from which point it dropped to 28,843,628 ounces in 1921, or a net increase for the period of over 100 per cent.

"The most important single factors in this increase have been the development of the motion picture industry and the growing popularity of automobile production. Approximately 5,000,000 ounces of silver are used annually in the United States alone for these purposes, and what is used in other countries doubtless brings the aggregate up to a billion figure.

"In the United States, the consumption of silver in arts and manufactures has risen from less than one-fourth of our total production in 1900 to over one half in 1921. Doubtless the consumption will continue its steady growth, requiring an increasing proportion of the country's output, especially if the present decline. Conditions in many other countries are similar and it seems likely that there will be a constant and growing world wide demand in the arts and manufactures for more silver, just as there is here."

HARDY COAL IS MAKING GOOD PROGRESS

President Paul Hardy of the Hardy Coal Company is in Boston.

Speaking of the progress the company is making, he says: "The developments at our property have brought no disappointments. All our expectations and estimates are being equalled, and in many departments exceeded. The company in June produced 6,000 tons of coal; this month it will produce 20,000 tons; in August it will produce 30,000 tons, and in October, when we must deliver 50,000 tons to meet our contract with Norfolk & Western, we will be well able to produce coal at the rate of 50,

BOSTON AMERICAN

Largest Evening Circulation in New England—July 27, 1923

The part of the income of the city of Boston credited to special appropriations was in 1921-22, about $12,549.

Real Coal Probe Needed

Mayor Curley Should Act With Other Cities and Towns to Find Cause and Remedy for High Prices

So the mine owners have raised the price of coal 50 cents without an announcement and without offering an excuse.

Who is to blame? All we know is that it is not those who delve in the dark, hot bowels of the earth to produce the coal. The blame lies somewhere between the railroads under private banker management, the coal owners and the retail coal dealers. We think we could fairly allocate that blame, but we are not sure enough to attempt it publicly in this column. We are, however, sure enough to say that part of the blame is to be placed upon the privately operated railroads.

Mayor Curley announces that if the price goes up above $16.50, he will put the city of Boston into the coal delivery business. He was very wise to do it last year and he will be wise to do it again this year, but he makes $16.50 the price at which the city will enter upon the coal distributing business. It is high enough. It is too high. Coal at $16.50 is a scandal, and a community which submits to it is a community which is deserving of the price it has to pay.

As wise as Mayor Curley's determination is he would be much wiser if he collaborated with the Mayors of the other cities and the town governments and appointed a commission to investigate the causes of this high price, and combined to set upon their recommendations with all the power of public opinion and of the law which the cities and towns can invoke.

It will be easy enough for the Mayors of the cities, if determined to correct this threatening situation—to appoint a real commission—a commission which had the intelligence and the determination to find the cause and the remedy. We have no doubt in the world that they would find that part of the cause was in the railroads and in the coal operators, and that the remedy was public operation of the railroads and of the coal mines.

Black and White Magic

Both Are Practised Today

Copyright, 1923, by Star Company

Black and white magic still exist. A colored gentleman wearing a robe and a cap, decorated with gilt stars, was arrested for practicing black magic in return for a small fee. He had just said to a customer, "You is sure to die sooner or later," when the law seized him.

At the same time in London a scientist was showing other physicians a process for the splicing of the nerves. That is white magic.

You are taken back to the old days of necromancy when you read that a new decree, published by the Department of Religious Affairs, allows the Turks to have their teeth filled. The rules of the prophet forbade it. Good Mohammedans must not wear ornaments, and gold teeth or teeth filled with gold were considered ornamental. Now the authorities decide that the Turk may have a gold tooth or a gold filling and still be a good Mohammedan.

The late Robert Fitzsimmons, able prize fighter, upon making a new acquaintance, would open wide his mouth to show the diamonds set in his teeth here and there. The prophet would not have allowed that.

What's Wrong in Alaska

Saving Our Resources

Copyright, 1923, by Star Company

We are supposed to be "saving our resources in Alaska." The government owns great wealth there and is saving it up—just for what isn't said. The answer, if the truth could be known, would be, "we are saving it for some clever exploiters of another generation."

Meanwhile, of one hundred boys that left Alaska to go to war, only two came back to Alaska when the war was over. That shows lack of opportunity in the land that should be above all others the land of opportunity.

Sometimes saving and conserving resources can be done in the wrong way.

For instance, near the Pacific this government owns very fine oil fields, and has arranged to conserve that oil. One of the big oil companies, meanwhile, owning the land next door, is pumping out the oil as fast as it will come—and, of course, pumping out at the same time the oil under the United States' land.

Whoever planned that particular "conservation" was either a fool or well paid to do it.

Let Each Nation Run Itself

Our Own Virtue Is Our Reward

Copyright, 1923, by Star Company

An earnest prohibitionist, says the British Embassy at Washington, should be kept dry out of respect for American prohibition laws.

The earnest prohibitionist evidently doesn't know that in all countries foreign embassies are looked upon as part of the territory of the nation represented by the Ambassdor. To ask the British Ambassador to go thirsty or to drink icewater in Washington would be like asking him to do the same thing in his English home.

Besides, how would prohibitionists like it if the French should say that the American Ambassador must not drink icewater in Paris, because the French consider icewater bad for the health—which, by the way, it is?

Mr. Ford in Politics

Not So Innocent

Copyright, 1923, by Star Company

Henry Ford in politics is not as innocent as he sounds. When you ask him about prohibition he answers, "That is a dead issue." That reply every wise politician will make.

Ford says the way to end war is to "remove conditions that make war." Sound, but a very large order. Those conditions are in the human brain, closely related by ancestry to a collection of fighting animals. It will take centuries to eliminate them.

Ford also utters solemn truth when he says that what big universities need is "men big enough to run them in a really big way."

DRESSES OF PAPER IN PARIS

PARIS, July 27.—Many of the wonderful new dress materials which make up the wardrobe of the fashionable American woman who buys in Paris are not silk nor chiffon, but pure and simple paper.

Insult, in fact, is added to injury by the further allegation by the French magazine Science et Vie that the paper used in the manufacture of these dress goods is not nice clean paper, but the refuse of the garbage boxes of Paris.

Police Exams

Editor Boston American:

Police Commissioner Wilson will let well enough alone if he continues his present policy of making promotions in the police department through competitive examination. If a man can't pass the exam he should not be promoted. Furthermore, to introduce a plan for promotion without competitive examination is going to leave the commissioner and his successors open to charges of favoritism every time a promotion is made. It is all too easy to create jealousy in a police department. Keep the competitive examinations, whether legal or not. They do no harm, and their absence may, and probably will, do a great deal of harm.

A well known writer says that if a woman will tell her age she will tell everything. But how about the relative drinking man? By the time sleep has overtaken him hasn't he also told everything?

Mother of Seven

Editor Helping Hand:

I am a young woman thirty-two years old and the mother of seven children. My husband has been sick with spinal trouble and is unable to do any work. My baby is in need of all kinds of clothing in two-year-old size. I also have a little girl three years old who has not had any shoes all Summer, and a girl four. They wear a six and seven size shoe. I have a boy eight and one nine, and two girls thirteen and fourteen, also badly in need of clothing. And I need a dress and shoes to go to my work in. It takes all I can earn to get them something to eat. I have to put my babies to bed when I wash their clothing out. I wear a size 40 and a 5½ shoe.

MRS. B. G.

SWORD AND SCIMITAR SURRENDER TO THE PEN

By Herbert Kaufman

GOOD news and bad. Civilization heaves a sigh of relief as the Near East treaty is concluded and one political volcano subsides.

Every negotiating nation except Jugo-Slavia sensibly signs the Lausanne agreement. Ismet Pasha brings back to Constantinople less bacon than he demanded and more than Kemal expected. There's a statesman for you.

Bismarck and Gladstone would have drawn different maps if his equal had represented the Porte when those two adept boundary shifters sowed Europe with dragons' teeth.

Belgrade delegates alone deny their country's responsibility for the proportionate share of the debts that justly go with renationalized Turkish territory.

But that won't matter in the long run. Jugo-Slavia itself, hybrid stop-gap of Versailles politics, wasn't designed for permanence.

A house of cards hastily thrown together from diplomacy's marked deck, and therefore destined to go the way of all such continental experiments.

Poincare Fiddles and Germany Burns

Germany is in sore straits. Communists repeat the Breslau bread riots at Frankfort, destroy property through the business section, adopt for a motto, "Without blood no justice," invade hotels and safes, seize food surplus and bind State Attorney Haas to a lamppost, then deliberately beat him to death.

As a consequence the mark desperately plunges to a dollar-to-a-million value.

Later cables report the government prohibition of meetings and parades. A courier bearing confidential documents from the French Embassy at Berlin is halted en route to Ruhr headquarters and his papers confiscated by police officials.

Every Chancellor from Moscow to London will hold conferences tonight. Hell's brewing along the Rhine.

Wise Men and Otherwise

Rejection of union ultimatums is now claimed as a certainty.

Mr. Harding, pausing to cast for trout on his homeward journey, will find more troubled waters to fish in by the time he reaches Washington.

But some clouds—thank Heaven—begin to lift. Judge Gary, true to his promise, summons steel corporation executives to discover how soon it may be possible to put all the company's plants on an eight-hour basis.

Charles M. Schwab, after due examination of records, is likewise convinced that the iron industry must fall into line and accept shorter working schedules.

After all, Mr. Gompers won't need to draw upon Federation war chests to finance his intended campaign of compulsion.

Wise men yield to the inevitable. Fools like Poincare and the high lords of anthracite madly invite the deluge.

Mussolini Meets Another Peasant's Son

Secretary of Labor Davis meets Mussolini. Two peasants' sons who improve upon acquaintance. Both continue to gain statures with experience, which shows the advantage of having little else to learn from.

Davis, properly dealing with immigration where it should be handled—at the source—arranges with Italy to pass upon the fitness of emigrants before departure.

Only such citizens as are physically and economically acceptable to America will hereafter receive passports.

The United States must still convince the world that our land has ceased to be a human dump.

Meanwhile, Ellis Island, obeying national will, is compelled to separate families and reluctantly rebuff the hopes of millions until Congress sees fit to alter existing statutes or plants consular and public health officers at foreign gangplanks.

Cheap at the Price

Twenty-five million dollars annually will buy enough aeroplanes to satisfy immediate army needs, keep local manufacturers going, and enable America to maintain 2,500 machines, 4,000 officers, and a force of 5,000 cadets and enlisted men.

For that money General Patrick will undertake the carriage of transcontinental mail, survey air roads, prepare aviation maps, spray infected crops and keep forest fires under control. Cheap at four times the cost!

He might have included the protection of borders against rum-runners and the pursuit of escaped criminals.

Insane convicts won't remain at large when we can rush a half dozen flyers within a few hours to the scene of any jail delivery.

Illinois hasn't yet found nine of the forty-one maniacs who broke out of the State Hospital at Chester. The others have been recaptured by householders and posses or voluntarily returned to the institution.

One poor, demented creature spent his precious liberty coddling a stray dog and another was found sitting on church steps crooning to a doll baby.

Tell It to Coue

Nothing crazy, however, about the six bank robbers who ride into Toronto, hold passers-by at bay, and after a battle with twelve armed guards dash off richer by $130,000.

The famous Northwest Mounted, reputed always to get its men, will now proceed to demonstrate if romance and the movie have drawn long bows or not.

A dapper gunman alights from his automobile, casually walks from table to table, locates his quarry, fills his mouth with bullets, explaining that "somebody nad been talking too much," and, as usual, makes a clean getaway. Romance and the movies haven't lately tossed any bouquets at Manhattan sleuths.

Burglary insurance companies say that apartment house thefts have increased 100 per cent. over last year's.

Facts don't support Dr. Coue's theory.
